Topics of the Times

A grocery firm of Liverpool, England, recently sent out circulars, announcing the sad death of a partner, and on the blank page gave the current prices for bacon, eggs, butter, and other staples dealt in by the firm.

A bridge worker in Los Angeles, Cal., recently had a marvelous escape from death. He was falling forty feet toward a pile of rocks when a guy rope caught him under the chin and tossed him to one side upon his feet.

In one consignment recently a feather dealer in London received 6,000 birds of paradise, 360,000 birds of various kinds from the East Indies, and 400,000 humming birds. In three months another dealer imported 356,398 birds from the East Indies.

The postoffice of Great Britain now employs over 1,300 female clerks. The largest number of these clerks are, of course, to be found in the London postoffice, where the bulk of them are paid fairly remunerative salaries, while what may be regarded as plums fall to the few.

Berne has eighteen hotels, but during the Swiss season they are often all full, and tourists have to travel from one to another before finding a bed. To obviate this the authorities have begun posting notices in the railway station naming the hotels where rooms are still to be had.

The 5-year-old son of H. Hagedon, of Kenton County, Kentucky, fell head foremost into the sandy bottom of a well forty feet deep, and had managed to climb nearly to the top of the well when he fell back. He started to climb again, however, and succeeded in getting out safely.

"Chocolat," a Paris dog, without a master, is earning his own living by visiting restaurants at regular intervals and killing the rats. He is fastidious in his tastes, frequenting only the fashionable restaurants near the Madeleine, the cafe concerts in the Champs Elysees, and the establishments in the Bois de Boulogne.

Farmers about Osceola, Mo., raise only corn and oats in large quantities, and the merchants of the place have to import potatoes, onions and other small vegetables; while over in Kansas, in the neighborhood of Arkansas City, one farmer this season has raised 1,000 bushels of white onions and sold them at 50 cents a bushel.

In Syria people never take off their caps or turbans when entering the house or visiting a friend, but they always leave their shoes at the door. There are no mats or scrapes outside and the floors inside are covered with expensive rugs, which, in Moslem houses, are kept very clean, and used to kneel upon while saying prayers.

The British Government is about to increase its subsidies to private steamship companies which will build and hold their vessels in readiness to be turned into warships, if required. Nine additional steamers have already been secured on these terms, and the scheme adds immensely to the effective strength of the British navy at a comparatively trifling cost.

The English provincial press is taking up the cudgels against those who throw or leave broken glass on public roads. It is not merely that the cycling tourist constantly has to pull up to repair damages of mangled tires, but valuable horses are often crippled to a serious extent. The worst offenders are said to be the vans which go from public house to public house with aerated waters.

A new source of revenue is to be opened to the farmers of America, and especially to those of the Eastern and Middle States, in the European demand for apples, which is growing rapidly. Last year 35,000 barrels were exported, while the exports this year already amount to more than 600,000 barrels. The fruit brings good prices, but only the best of it can be sold in competition with the foreign product.

Twenty years ago, when the British formally annexed the Transvaal, they found in the republic's treasury exactly 36 cents. This year President Krueger has asked—that is, commanded—his boer legislature to appropriate from the surplus of the country £850,000 for the purchase of arms with which to suppress any inclination the taxpaying English residents may show toward interfering with local politics.

If the observers at Flagstaff are right in their conclusions that Mercury and Venus make but one revolution on their axes during their journey round the sun, so that each day is a year long, these planets cannot be inhabited by people constituted like those on the earth. It has been supposed that Venus at least was very similar to the earth in its phenomena and characteristics, and might be peopled by much the same kind of beings; but as Venus' period of rotation is nearly the same as that of the earth, it must have six months of uninterrupted sunshine and six of continuous night.

The Paris mint has just sent to St. Petersburg 625,000 silver rubles, which have been coined for the Russian Government. They were packed in 250 casks, which were padlocked and sealed at the mint and then sent to the Gare du Nord in ten carts. Police officers met them there and witnessed their transfer to special railway vans, in which they were taken to Dunkerque. Here a Russian man-of-war was in readiness to receive them and started directly the cases were on board.

White Lies.

When may it be right to tell an untruth? is a problem in ethics not easily solved. That there are times when it would simply be brutal roughness to be honest every one admits, and a deviation from the strict letter of the word is excusable. Indeed, it is a matter of impossibility to be always absolutely truthful. Respect for the peculiarities and opinions of our neighbors has grown to be a virtue; but one virtue suffers for another, and truth must suffer thereby. We do not mentally belabor each other with coarse truths, as in the olden days; we are socially insincere, but with more well meaning. We are so daintily cultured now that we should choke over a small distasteful pill of veracity, the while we unflinchingly swallow a big one and never notice it, or pretend we don't. If we were all brave enough to face honesty boldly, to endure being told that we were boring each other to extinction, that we were not wanted, we had overrun our welcome, and so on—yes, if we could endure such genuineness, then "white lies" would soon become a thing of the past. But that is impossible. We have so built up our social fabric that even one glass pane of Truth would cause a scattering abroad of acquaintance almost as calamitous as there was at the erection of a certain tower. We must all be deceivers in the present state of society; but many "while lies" may be excused on the ground that they are uttered in kindliness of spirit, to give pleasure, or at any rate spare from pain our sensitive neighbor.

AMERICAN CATTLE.

Growth and Peculiarities of the Export Trade.

According to a British Government report, the importation of American cattle into England is steadily on the increase. For the first five months of the current year it was 175,000 head, as compared with 112,000 for the same period last year. If this rate per month be sustained, the year's import will be over 400,000, or much larger than the exceptional importation in 1892. The London and Liverpool markets have been so heavily supplied that the prices of American beeves have there fallen as low as 9 to 9½ cents per pound (estimated dress weight); while export steers were being quoted at Chicago at 3.75 to 4 cents per pound live weight. At these rates shipments must have been at a loss.

The development of the chilled beef import trade presents many interesting features, and is in many respects very similar to that of live cattle. Taking 600 pounds as the average weight of cattle slaughtered for the dressed beef trade, last year's export from this country of fresh beef to England represented a number of cattle nearly equal to that exported alive, the latter being, however, heavier cattle. The past five months' export of chilled beef was 108,759,600 pounds, as compared with 81,841,065 pounds for the same period last year. At this rate the year's export will be some 60,000,000 pounds greater than in 1892. It seems still a matter of doubt which of the two branches of the trade offers the largest profits. The Secretary of Agriculture, in his report for 1895, says:

"It appears to work out more profitably to transport the live cattle. They are carried on parts of the ship that would otherwise be unoccupied. They do not require such special fittings and appliances as to debar the vessel from carrying other cargo when cattle are not available."

The ocean freight on the forequarters of a steer varies from $5 to $6.

In the Flowery Kingdom.

Of all the curious trades in the world, surely the strangest is the artificial manufacture of wild men. Yet a well-known English doctor in China has just certified from his own personal experience that this art is regularly practiced in the Flowery Kingdom. First a youth is kidnapped, then bit by bit his skin is removed, and the skin of a dog or bear grafted piece by piece upon him. His vocal chords are next destroyed by the action of charcoal to make him dumb, and the double purpose of causing "etiolation" of the skin and utter degradation of the mental faculties is effected by keeping him immured in a perfectly dark hole for a number of years. In fact, by treating him like a brute for a sufficiently long time he is made into one. At last he is exhibited to the entirely credulous Chinese as a wild man of the woods, and his possessors reap a rich harvest. The priests, it seems, are adepts of the art. When a kidnapper, however, is caught by the people he is torn to pieces, and when the authorities get him they torture and promptly behead him.

The Library Corner

Marriott Watson's next story is to be entitled "The Career of Delia Hastings."

The Rev. Washington Gladden is writing a book on "The Working Church and Its Pastor."

The visitors at Shakspeare's birthplace during the year ended with last March numbered 27,038.

Harold Frederic's new book, "Mrs. Albert Grundy," is declared by the London Sketch to be rather flat and "too easily written."

Maurice Maeterlinck is at work on a new tragedy to be called "Aglavaine et Selysette." The title sounds quite Spenserian, with a touch of the Far East.

Though 74 years of age, Edmond de Goncourt has attracted world-wide attention with his new volume on "Hokousai," the greatest of Japanese designers.

Gladstone's new volume of "Studies Subsidiary to the Works of Bishop Butler" will be published early in July. It will appear simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic.

Gen. Sir T. E. Gordon has nearly ready a volume entitled "Persia Revisited, 1895," in which he comments on Muzaffer-ed-Din, the present Shah, and on the political situation.

After a long stay at his country house at Saint-Tropez Emile Ollivier is again back in Paris. Improved health allows him to push forward his history of the Second Empire and a novel called "Marie Madeleine."

Charles E. L. Wingate is preparing a volume on "Shakspeare's Heroes on the Stage" as a companion to his "Shakspeare's Heroines on the Stage." He also has ready a handsome holiday volume to be called "Famous American Actors of To-day."

The Bookman is authority for it that John Morley has in preparation a new volume of "Studies in Literature," and adds: "It is pleasant to note that Mr. Morley's writings have happily continued to increase in spite of the jealous demands of the political shrew."

Mrs. Lynn Linton's "My Literary Life," which is to be published in volume form in the autumn, is said to contain some startling revelations and much personal gossip about literary characters who lived amid the "Sturm und Drang" of the midcentury period.

Andrew Lang says: "O difference in taste in books, when it is decided and vigorous, breaks many a possible friendship." He indicates the passport to his favor by telling as that "he or she who condemns Scott and cannot read Dickens is a person with whom I would fain have no further converse."

In 1865 four lads occupied the same room on the ground floor of the first division of Cadet Barracks at West Point. Since then they have made their names more or less well known in current American literature. They are Capt. Charles King, Arthur Sherburne Hardy, John Brisben Walker and Richard Henry Savage.

After Mr. Barrie's mother and elder sister were buried together last September it was authoritatively announced that these two were the original of Jess and Leeby in "A Window in Thrums." It is said that the sad beauty of those characters is found in still fuller measure in Mr. Barrie's forthcoming book about his mother entitled "Marget Ogilvy."

Iron Foundations for Tall Buildings.

A new way of constructing a solid foundation for a tall building has been tried with success in Berlin. It was necessary to find a solid base sufficiently strong to carry a building weighing more than 10,000 tons. The plot of ground upon which the building was to stand was adjoined on both sides by high buildings, which rendered unsafe the digging to any depth for a foundation. The only way out of the difficulty was the sinking of a caisson in the center of the plot, upon the cemented top of which a hollow form of cement was built. Into this form molten iron was poured, filling up the space, and upon this cast-iron foundation plate the understructure of the building now rests, while the side walls are supported by a cantilever structure. The full weight of the load upon the cast-iron foundation is estimated at more than 20,000 tons.

Looks Out for Himself.

In hunters' lore there is an idea that the jackal is the lion's provider—that he finds the game and takes the lion to it. This superstition has no more foundation than is found in the fact that after a lion has slain his quarry the jackals always attend, and await the conclusion of the repast, in order to pick up the leavings.

A BOUT AT QUARTER-STAFF.

A Stout Swineherd More than Held His Own with Robin Hood.

Caroline Brown contributes a story about "George O'Green and Robin Hood" to St. Nicholas. Here is an account of the meeting between these two characters:

"How art thou called, Master Pigminder?"

"George o'Green."

"Why that?"

"Ho, ho, ho!" roared the churl. "So wise, and don't know that withal! Why, I live on the green and mind the pigs!" And he wiped the tears of laughter from his eyes on the sleeve of his fustian jerkin.

"I doubt me," said Robin, "if thou canst play with the quarter-staff."

"Ay, but I can!" said George, quickly.

"Show thy prowess, then!" said Robin, with a quick thrust at him with his white-oak staff."

"Bide here and mind the pigs till I go to yon thicket and get me a staff."

Robin consented, and gazed after the brawny man as he walked with long, slow strides to the oak thicket on the hither side of the brook. There he carefully selected a tough green sapling, almost two inches thick, and then wrenched it off near the ground with a twist of his powerful hands.

"This bodes me no good in the coming tilt," thought Robin. But though he never withdraw for any cause, rarely had he suffered defeat.

George turned him about, and, coming up to Robin, said:

"Canst lend that knife o' thine? 'Tis o'er too frayed for a good staff," he said, looking at the fringe of splinters where he had snapped off the stem.

He trimmed the staff carefully, then handed back to Robin his knife. But chancing to look around, he saw the pigs scampering off to a distant corner of the common.

"Thou'st not minded the pigs! Now Goody Hoskins will rate me well!" cried George with heat, yet timidly withal.

"But Sandy didn't give me warning!" pleaded Robin.

"Good old Sandy! Faithful shoat! He knows thee not. He'll talk only to me!" and George's ill-nature left him at this proof of the faithfulness of his favorite.

He set off at full speed after the pigs, Robin at his heels. When they had got the swine back to their own feeding-ground they lay themselves down on the sort thymy turf to rest. The chase had been a right merry one, and both were short of wind; for the pigs had scampered and dodged sprightfully in a way that made the men more weary than a five-mile sprint.

George dozed off on the instant, and Robin panted loud. In ten minutes Robin prodded George with his staff, and said:

"Sluggard! Art ready?"

George yawned prodigiously, showing strong teeth, white as a young dog's, rimming his jaws. Then he rose and ran his fingers through his shock of red hair, stretched mightily, and said briefly:

"I be. Lay on!"

"Well, then," cried Robin, "stand forth now and defend thyself. I'll warrant thou wilt be no longer sleepy when I shall have done with thee!"

At once the sound of the clashing of staves filled the air. As both were so deft in handling the staff, all blows were skillfully parried. At the end of an hour Robin's arm began to weary, but George's brawny arm was unfailing. In warding off a powerful blow Robin's arm swerved, and George's staff came down on his crown with a sharp rap, the first hit made by either. For near two hours the clashing of staves kept up, when Robin's foot slipped on the thyme, and down he rolled into the brook.

A Curiously Named Garden.

There is a garden in Brixton kept by an old gentleman, which presents some curiosities in floral nomenclature. The owner has been seized with a desire to label his flowers after the manner of botanists, but, knowing nothing of scientific terms, consulted an acquaintance. The result is more amusing than appropriate, and proves the folly of wisdom where ignorance is bliss. Scientific names have been affixed to all the flowers, but strictly on the principle that "a rose by any other name will smell as sweet." One row bears the inscription "Nux vomica;" another is boldly labeled "Nisi Prius;" a third is affirmed to be "Ipecacuanha," and another to be "Particeps criminis." The amateur gardener is exceedingly proud of his collection, and no one has enlightened him on the incongruity of the descriptions.—London Telegraph.

A Unique Republic.

The republic of Goust is the smallest in the world. Andorra is an empire in comparison. Goust is about a mile square, and it houses 130 persons. It has been independent these 250 years.

It stands on top of a mountain by the Spanish border, near the edge of France, and it gets along very comfortably without ever mixing itself in other people's affairs, and without reading the evening papers, or, so far as we know, the morning ones. The delectable 130 govern themselves by a council, one member of which is selected to see that the business agreed upon is executed. Matters go along very smoothly, and Goustians are all the happier because nobody knows much about them, and therefore they are unenvied.—Kansas City Times.

Partitions in Silos.

Where several silos are desired, or where two kinds of silage are to be stored so as to be fed at any time, one large silo with one or more partitions will be cheaper than separate silos. In the illustration shown herewith will be seen how a partition may be put in a round silo. By running a second partition at right angles to the first the silo may be divided into four pits, but it is always best to avoid partitions when possible to do so. If a partition is made it should be air-tight, but if the filling takes place on both sides at the same time, it need not be as strong. In the round silo the partition should be put in after the lining. To make the partition, two thicknesses of inch boards with paper between may be used. These should be nailed to studding made out of 6x6's sawed in two diagonally, using two pieces at each end of the partition, placed so that the sawed face fills the corner formed by the partition. With the intermediate studs the boards should be nailed to the sawed or wide side, so as to avoid forming square corners. If a rectangular silo is built, then two layers of matched fencing with tar paper between should be used for the lining. To lessen the spoiling of silage at the corners, these should be cut off with one layer of inch boards about 18 inches long. This should then be lined with roofing tin soldered together into a strip long enough to reach from near the top to the bottom, and wide enough to nail to the lining and to completely cover the two ends of the short boards by as much as two inches on each side. The tin should be kept painted with coal tar to prevent rusting.

Selecting Seed Corn.

Selection of seed corn and its care afterwards are of much more importance than many realize, until bitter disappointment faces them with perhaps one-third of a stand, and then it is too late to recover for the year. And still farmers go right on and do the same thing another year. A careful and painstaking farmer who makes a success of all his farm operations says upon the subject:

"While I always go into the field and select early at least a part of the seed, I do not plant such selection unless I have failed at husking time to gather such as I desire. I can select just the size and shape that seems best to my mind at that time and I cure it in the chamber over my kitchen stove and leave it there until wanted in the ear. I would not shell any I did not use for the year, and during my entire life I have never so saved corn that 98 per cent. would not grow, and seldom ever fails even at three years old. While the early ripening will always grow and will make very early corn, after a number of years of such saving I am satisfied that variety grows small by so doing. I prefer to sow the largest and best of its kind. At husking time, either from stalk or shock one can make the selection. Leave enough husk on the ear and throw to one side of the wagon and in this way the corn can be selected with little or no hindrance, unless there has been a very hard freezing with corn damp there is very little danger of its not growing if properly cared for after picking."

How to Cure Meat.

After killing and dressing, if in cold weather, bring the hogs into some building where they will not freeze, as pork which has been once frozen is more difficult to cure. To commence cutting up—after the animal heat is out of the carcass—cut off the head just behind the ears. If cut in the right place the head can easily be twisted off. Cut off the feet an inch or a little more below the hocks; then cut down the middle of the backbone, lay the two sides flat and take out the lard, beginning at the kidney. It is not a bad plan to take out the lard while the pigs are hanging, and before they are quite set. Cut off the hams, cutting with a sloping cut. Trim them neatly, the trimmings will all come in for sausage meat, and be more profitable than if ugly corners are left on, which are also wasted when once cured on the hams. Next cut off the shoulder behind the shoulder blade. Trim shoulders after taking out rib bones. Take back and rib bones out of sides, unless in case of light weight hogs, when it is better to take out back bone only, leaving ribs in. To take out ribs, keep the knife as near the bones as possible. This may be awkward at first, but experience will teach.

Handling Baled Hay.

It is difficult to lift an ordinary bale on to a wagon more on account of its unwieldiness than its weight. The wrought iron hook presented in the illustration will enable a man to handle baled hay with much greater ease. The bale to be lifted should be stood on one end, then lean the upper end against you and reach over and place the hook near the other end and bring it up perpendicularly and then the whole bale may be easily handled. The hook should be made of 3-8 inch round iron, with a loop for a good grasp by the hand and may be drawn out smaller at the other end.—Farm and Home.

A Good Cement.

An excellent cement for mending almost anything may be made by mixing together litharge and glycerine to the consistency of thick cream or fresh putty. The cement is useful in mending stone jars or any coarse earthenware, stopping leaks in seams of tin pans or wash boilers, cracks and holes in iron kettles, etc. It may also be used to fasten on lamp tops, or tighten loose nuts, to secure loose bolts whose nuts are lost, to tighten loose joints of wood or iron, or in many other ways about the various kitchen utensils, the range, sink and in the pantry fittings. In all cases the article mended should not be used until the cement has hardened, which will require from one day to a week, according to the quantity of cement used. This cement will resist the action of water, hot or cold, acids, and almost any degree of heat.

What Counts.

Some men will do twice as much work as others in a given time, and not seem to be working hard either. It is steadiness and "know how" that counts. False steps and motions soon wear out the hardest workers. Take an interest in what you do, and hire the men that can get over work rapidly and well, even if they do cost a little more per day. It will pay in the long run.

Caring for Sweet Potatoes.

The old theory of pulling sweet potato vines as soon as killed by the frost is erroneous. The potatoes should be dug before cold weather and stored in layers in a dry cellar. If possible get them off the floor. Pack around the outside of the box or shelf holding them with leaves. They are quite susceptible to light touches of frost.

The Live Farmers.

The live farmer is sure to be at the farmers' institutes where experienced men come to relate the causes of success, and of their various failures, in attaining it. The live farmer is awake to the importance of listening to men of his kind. Their experience is the power which pushes on agricultural progress.

A Divorced Pair Meet.

Walter L. Sinn, son of Colonel Sinn, the well-known theatrical manager, was buried from Plymouth Church yesterday. At the conclusion of the services the lid was removed from the casket and the large audience filed past the remains, taking a last look at the face which had been so familiar to them for many years. Then a pretty, pathetic incident occurred. Colonel Sinn took the arm of his wife, from whom he has been divorced for a number of years, and leaned over the casket. She looked at the face of her dead son and then up to that of her husband. There seemed to be an understanding in the look. He placed his arm in hers and led her down the aisle, following the casket. There was scarcely a dry eye in the large church. Every one noticed the incident, and with a common impulse it occurred to all alike that it meant a reconciliation, an act that would be hailed with joy by the many friends of both.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Where Dressmaking Is Cheap.

"Men in the West Indies do not growl at their wives' dressmakers' bills," says a woman who has just come from Turk's island. "I paid $2.75 for having an elaborate silk gown made, and it was a Chinese puzzle to put it together, for it was a rare silk brought me from England, and was a very scant pattern. The ordinary price for making a gown is $2.50."—New York Times.

BABY INCUBATORS IN FRANCE

New Charity in Paris to Save the Lives of Delicate Infants.

A small shop has been hired on the Boulevard Poissoniere to contain the hot air boxes in which prematurely born babies are kept. It is a gratuitous charity. All that is required is a certificate of poverty to be produced by the family of the child and signed by some responsible person; for the society, not being rich and the process of keeping up the establishment being extremely costly, those who can afford payment are obliged to give it. The place is small and scrupulously clean. On first entrance one's impression is that of seeing the morgue through the wrong end of an opera glass. Fourteen small glass boxes with leaden tops, capped by a long stovepipe-like chimney, topped by a ventilator, stood around the walls. These boxes are heated from below and the mattress on which the baby lies is porous and permits the hot air to circulate freely. Each of these hot air boxes was tenanted by an absolutely motionless atom of humanity, swaddled in white linen, pinned tightly over the feet, so that only the head and hands were visible. Over the pillow of each hung a thermometer, the unvarying temperature being kept at 89 degrees. A rather pretty girl, who acted as superintendent, explained that they saved 50 per cent of the 6 months babies and 80 per cent of the children over 6 months.

One small candidate was waiting for his father to come and take him away. He was quite a fine infant, with a thick crop of dark hair, a truculent expression, and a talent for squalling that amounted to genius. The party was much struck by what was apparently a mulatto baby, the dark yellow of its complexion shading into brown at its finger tips; but the attendants said it was suffering from jaundice, and its case was by no means serious. These poor mites, it seems, are apt to have liver trouble, which causes jaundice, and also inability to swallow, in which case they are fed through the nostril, and even stomach trouble, which is serious, as, if they cannot assimilate any nourishment, they die of inanition. It is rather hard on the hapless infants to suffer all the ills that flesh is heir to at so tender an age, and, after scrambling through all manner of maladies, to be handed over to the joys of a pauper existence; but, putting that philosophic view of the case out of the question, the charity is certainly an excellent one, and does more to combat the depopulation of France than all the speeches and articles on that thrilling subject can ever accomplish.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

The Reins of Government.

The tyrannical man may be obeyed by the members of his household, but he is seldom loved, even by his own wife. Unreasonable and exacting demands may wear out even that long-enduring thing—a woman's patience. If a man understands how to reign in his own kingdom he may go on being undisputed sovereign without a rebel among his willing subjects. For woman like to be governed—to feel the hand of steel in the glove of velvet—and secretly despise the men who are ruled by them. "Why does Mrs. Jones treat her husband so contemptuously?" a man was once heard to ask. "He looks as if he could crush her with two fingers, and yet she scoffs at his opinion on every subject. I should say he had about twice her sense and twice her talent, and yet she palpably despises him. Why on earth is it?" "Oh, the reason is perfectly clear!" said the lady to whom he spoke. "Mr. Jones let his wife begin to govern him when they were first married, and he has never got the reins into his own hands since. Nothing in the world a woman thinks so lightly of as a man who isn't her master. She treats him as if he were dust under her feet; but if Mr. Jones would only assert himself, even now, and turn round upon her, you would see how she would admire him!"

A Diminutive Watch.

In the year 1764 a handsome and curious present was made to George III. by Arnold, a celebrated London Watchmaker. It was a repeating timepiece set in a ring, and was about the size of an old-fashioned silver 3-cent piece. Though it weighed less than five pennyweights it was composed of 120 different pieces, and was provided with the first ruby cylinder ever made. For this little mechanical marvel Arnold received from the king a present of 500 guineas.

Changed His Mind.

"I find, madam," said a young physician, "that your husband is suffering from overwork."

"And will he have to give up his place under the government?" she asked anxiously.

"What's that? Is he a government official?"

"Yes, sir."

"H'm! I'll diagnose his case again. He probably needs exercise of some kind."—New York Recorder.

On the Bishop.

A good cricket story is told of the late bishop of Rochester. He was batting in a local cricket match when the bowler sent a ball very wide of the wicket.

"Keep the ball in the parish!" cried the irascible bishop.

The next ball knocked his lordship's middle stump out. The yokel shouted:

"I think that's somewhere about the diocese, my lud!"—Tit-Bits.

So Cheap.

"Say, Tradeley, why does your floorwalker never watch the bargain counter?"

"Because things are so cheap there that thieves prefer to buy and have the goods delivered."—Detroit Free Press.

Those Dear Cows.

From first to last, Arnold must have published between 20 and 30 volumes, and as we are told that writing did not come easily to him it is clear that Mr. Morley's description of him as one of the most occupied men of his time is not exaggerated. His correspondence therefore was confined almost wholly to his own family, and is naturally filled with such personal matters as they would be most concerned to know. The fireside concerns of his daily existence—his children, his pets, his health, his garden, the places he visited, the dinners he ate, and the people in whose company he ate them.

The bulk of these letters were written to his mother, and news of his children naturally plays a large part in them. "They go everywhere with me that I will take them, and their talk is delightful. We passed a yard the other day where there were cows, and N. said: 'What a nice smell from those dear cows, papa! Isn't it kind of the dear cows to give us smells?'" One can imagine with what pleasure the grandmother would read such instances of the little one's quickness and sympathy. One can imagine with what pleasure the father would write them. But alien eyes, bent possibly upon their own children and their own cows, may be pardoned for reading unmoved such essentially familiar and domestic records. There is a saying: "Never tell your troubles. You only take up the time of the man who is waiting to tell you his." In this hard and busy world the saying perhaps holds good of other things than troubles. — Macmillan's Magazine.

New York as a Literary Mart.

Edward W. Bok, in The Ladies' Home Journal, writes of "The American Literary Center," and presents the claims of New York and Boston (between which cities it may be inferred he believes it rests) for the distinction. He summarizes New York in this way: "New York undoubtedly offers the largest market for literature of any city in America. This is naturally so, as must always follow in the case of the largest and wealthiest city of any country. The Empire City controls the largest number of publishing houses, even though it cannot claim all the principal ones. It has a larger number of magazines and periodicals of all kinds than any other city, even though it is deprived the right to the first and foremost of all American literary periodicals, the leading eclectic magazine of the world or of the most widely circulated channels of serial literature. But, unquestionably, it has the majority, and a powerful majority it is. It has libraries galore, one might almost say, yet the two principal libraries of the country are in other cities. Its list of authors, resident of the city or near it, is long and representative, embracing some of the most gifted pens which make contemporaneous American literature. If all our best writings do not emanate from its immense places of output, a goodly portion undeniably do."

Poor Louisa's Sore Throat.

A teacher in a national school who had been much annoyed by truancy, says London Answers, has recently been stringent in enforcing the rule that her scholars, on their return to school after an absence, must bring her a note stating in full the cause of such absence, the note to be in the writing of a parent or guardian. The following is a note brought by one of her pupils after two weeks' absence:

"Louisa was absent monday, please excuse her.

"Louisa was absent toosday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent wensday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent thursday, she had a sore throte.

"Louisa was absent friday, she had a sore throte.

"Read this over again for the next week."

Beauties of "the Code" Illustrated.

Two young Russian officers attached to the Orsk infantry regiment recently quarreled over their cups in a cafe chantant at Orenburg, and one of them struck the other across the cheek with his open hand. The subalterns were intimate comrades, and the aggressor made an ample and satisfactory apology when he came to his senses. This was cordially accepted by his friend, but the regimental court of honor decreed that the officers should fight, and a duel was arranged with pistols at 20 paces. The young lieutenant who had received the affront and forgiven his friend was hit in the thigh and crippled, and consequently is unfitted for further service.—London News.

Something For Nothing.

"It is astonishing," said an observant woman not long ago, "how much some people will give if they think they are getting something for nothing. Now I teach my children constantly that anything of value can never be had for nothing. There is such a thing as luck, and there are bargains, but in the end you will find that such luck never comes to those who are always on the lookout for it, and that bargains are obtained only by those who know what to buy, where to buy and how to buy."

Perseverance is surely the keystone of luck,
And fortune will favor the one who has pluck.
—Brooklyn Eagle.

Applying the Proverb.

The Louisville Courier-Journal tells of an extremely religious man who lives on Lost creek in Greenup county. He is a close student of his Bible, and doesn't propose to live on Lost creek in the next world if he can help it. A few nights ago he was searching the Scriptures and ran across the admonition of Solomon, "Spare the rod and spoil the child." After studying the matter over he concluded that the rod had not been applied often enough to his own family of seven hopefuls, and he yanked the entire seven out of bed and administered a sound whipping to very one of them.

HUMORS OF WHIST.

Remarks That Have Been Made Around the Table.

A good story is told of a lawyer in Chicago who considered himself a great authority on whist. He wrote a book on the subject, and sent it to a famous Milwaukee player for his opinion of it. In about a week the book was returned to him, with the following letter:

MY DEAR SIR—Your favor of the — inst., accompanied by your book, was duly received. I have read it very carefully. It seems to be a very good game, but I don't think it is as good a game as whist. Sincerely yours,

It is no unusual thing to hear a player at whist remark, after being berated by his partner for very bad playing, "Well, I play whist for pleasure." He does not stop to think that he gives his partner anything but "pleasure." Such players cause their partners many "un mauvais quart d'heure." It might be a great "pleasure" for a novice to play a duet on the piano with Paderewski. One can readily imagine how much "pleasure" Paderewski would find in the performance. If a man wants to play whist, he should study the books and familiarize himself with them before inflicting his play on a partner who knows anything of the game, or else devote his great mind to dominos.

It is related of one of these gentry that, after a hand at whist, his partner asked him, "Why in thunder didn't you trump that queen of clubs?" He naively replied, "Why, I only had one little trump." Sometimes, as in this case, the humor—unknown to the perpetrator—carries off the bad feeling engendered by his horrid mistakes and ignorance. It is so easy, if one would devote a little time and ordinary intelligence to the study of the game, to learn to play a fairly good game of whist.

Four players started a game of whist not long since, a noted wit being one of them. He was dealing and made a misdeal. He dropped his cards and burst into laughter. "That reminds me," said he, "of my dear old friend, Judge Peckham, father of the present judge. He was a great whist player of the 'old school' and had scant patience with a poor player. I was passing the cardroom one day and met one of the poorest players in the club coming out. 'Have you been playing whist?' I asked. 'Yes,' said he. 'Who was your partner?' 'Judge Peckham,' he replied. 'Did he pitch into you pretty strong?' 'No, indeed. He only made one remark. I was dealing and made a misdeal. The judge said, "Why, you fool, you don't even know how to deal!" This is the only remark he made during the entire game.'"—Washington Star.

A SAVAGE MARSUPIAL.

An Australian Mammal That Is a Whole Menagerie In Itself.

The so called zebra wolf of Australia is also called the native tiger; but, strange to say, it is not even a cousin to zebra, wolf or tiger, belonging to the same family as the kangaroo, the slow and gentle wombat and the sly old opossum—all those animals that carry their babies in their pockets.

The eyes, which are large, are furnished with a membrane, like the eyes of owls, and this is called the nictitating membrane. This is almost continually moving in the daytime, as the eyes are exposed to more or less of sunshine. Without this membrane the amount of light admitted through the large pupil would puzzle the zebra wolf.

The general color of the somewhat short woolly fur is grayish brown, a little inclined to yellowish. Across this ground color the black bands show up sharp and clear. These stripes are usually 14 in number, beginning just back of the shoulders, where they are narrowest, and growing broader and longer back of the haunches. The skins are in demand for lap robes and rugs, which gives an added reason for hunting the wearers.

Two zebra wolves were taken to the zoological gardens in London, where they flourished and raised a family. When they came, it was thought Great Britain would be too cold for them, but there seems to be no reason why they should not thrive even in Canada, as they have been known to live on the mountains of Tasmania, 3,500 feet above the sea level, where the ground is sometimes covered with snow for many weeks and frosts are severe.

Do you wonder that his name is slightly mixed? The marvel is that he is not named menagerie and done with it, for with his doglike face and short wolf ears, eyes like an owl, zebra stripes and a pouch like a kangaroo, his mixed pickle beastship could answer to almost any name you might wish to call him. When he becomes extinct, we can truly say we ne'er shall see his like again.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Nature's Noblemen.

Two self supporting gentlewomen were recently comparing their experiences of the past few years, and both declared that on the rare occasions when they had been treated uncivilly by persons of the other sex it had been by those who were known in the social world as gentlemen. George Meredith has made Diana of the Crossways to say: "The English gentleman trades on his reputation. In a third class carriage no woman is unprotected."—London Sun.

At the Navy Yard.

"So this is the minie rifle?"

"Yes, mum."

"And that's the maxim gun?"

"Yes, mum. The minie-mum and the maxim-mum!"—New York Recorder

The rosy fingered morn did there disclose her beauty, ruddy as a blushing bride, gilding the marigold, painting the rose, with Indian chrysolites her cheeks were dy'd.—Baron.

The poison dagger, an infamous weapon still in use among the aborgines of Brazil, is fashioned after the fang of a serpent.

Paper hangings, for use on walls, were introduced into Europe from the east in 1675.

A Weasel's Hypnotic Power.

A London correspondent writes: A friend on whose word I can rely told me the following: He saw a lark flying above the turnpike road, fluttering some four or five feet above the ground in evident distress. As he looked he saw a weasel in the middle of the road waiting for the bird to come down. This it did, falling helplessly close to the animal, which killed it and carried it away. This incident seems to show that a weasel has some fascination in his eye.

The Leap Year Dance.

The social event of the season was the grand leap year ball given by our young ladies at Mairs' hall last evening. The result of the girls' efforts proved that when the women make up their minds to run an affair of the kind they can beat the men all hollow. The hall was tastefully decorated with evergreens, ivy and myrtle, the words "Happy New Year" appearing in large letters on either side. Flags and portierres were artistically draped to cover sharp corners. At half-past eight the grand march, led by Miss Mary Mulholland and Mr. Martin Church and followed by forty couple, fell into line. The ladies had complete charge of the floor until supper time and no gentleman was allowed to cross the floor without a lady; everyone who violated the rule was fined ten cents. After the supper, which was served at the Norman House, the gentlemen took control and the ball rolled on till five o'clock in the morning. Messrs. Freeman Mitchell and Ed. Ober of Big Pine furnished the music. The dance was pronounced by every body who attended to be jolliest affair of year in the county.

The following were some of the most noticeable costumes:

Norman Mairs—A petite and charming brunette wore a yellow gown decolette.

Louis Schabbell—A demi-blonde of commanding presence, royal purple velvet en train.

Irv. H. Mulholland—Sky blue surah dancing length. Ornaments, pearls entwined in the coiffure.

Julian Eibeshutz—A stately hazel-eyed beauty, white satin decolette with a bouquet of lilies of the valley.

Charlie Rose—Rose tulle, rose slippers, a bouquet of Duchesse roses.

George Wood—Ashes of roses velvet with watteau back, and a girdle of postage stamps.

Leon Marx—Cream satin with a diamond locket, the shape of a nursing bottle.

Dennis Hession—Irish green velvet with a bouquet of shamrock.

Charles Walter looked queenly in black satin en traine, point lace and diamonds.

John Ramsey—Pink nun's veiling and white lace collarette.

Ernest Laird—A slender blonde, wore a robe of lavender silk with a snood of lavender ribbon in his fair hair.

Ed. Shepherd—Black tulle over yellow satin, dancing length. Ornaments, a diamond ring on the engagement finger.

Martin Church's well-rounded figure looked very girlish in white swiss and blue ribbons.

Walter Lamar—Black lace and cream roses.

Albert Lewis—Amber satin, gold nuggets for earrings.

John Lewis—Cherry satin with tube roses in the hair.

Abe Church—White illusion with white satin belt ribbon. Ornaments, opals.

Frank Densmore—Canary colored crepon with a bouquet of chrysanthemums.

Jacob Hodge—Nile-green chiffon over white silk; hair powdered; ornaments, a wreath of smiles.

Mr. Julius Roeper—Ox-blood-red plush and necklace of topaz.

Ed. Rose—White organdie and roses.

The ladies appeared in regular evening dress.

We tread the waltz's dreamy maze the late hour scorning,
With limpid eyes and brightest smiles our face adorning,
Nor heed the weary ankles timely warning,
But oh, what a difference in the morning.

Willie Baker of Big Pine is visiting relatives at Fort Independence.

Mrs. Edward Reynolds of Georges Creek is seriously ill with pneumonia.

Mrs. J. R. Moffett and Miss Susie Roughney went to Bip Pine Thursday.

Mrs. Mates and Miss Dodge, of Lone Pine, are visiting friends at Camp Independence.

Mrs. Wm. Walker, of Olancha, has been visiting friends in Independence for several days past.

RANDSBURG.

The Hornespoon to be Born into Newspaperdom.

[Tulare Times.]

Now that the Examiner and New York Journal have recognized our camp through one of its ablest writers, I am afraid the numerous readers of the Times will not care for my descriptive letters. Still it is somewhat satisfactory to know that several of these letters were in your exchanges.

Several transfers have been made in the past ten days. New strikes have been made and much development work has been and is being done.

The rush still continues, but the stages are not returning empty.

As usual, after the proclamation of the citizens' committee, the town lost several of its rounders. Yet their places have been taken by a harder looking crowd. Many of them are here for no good purpose. When the new year steps in many of them will only be too glad to take chances in jumping other people's property.

Harry Watson, an old Fresno county newspaper man, has a "notice" to the good people of Randsburg and vicinity that on or about the 1st of January the Randsburg Hornspoon will be issued.

Beds are the drawback to our camp. Every one who can afford to invest in one or more does so, and starts a lodging room, or rather tent.

Many funny scenes come up every day and night. On the arrival of the stage the usual crowd is on hand to see who comes, etc. The passengers after getting out, have to elbow their way through to the hotel. There the tenderfoot shows himself by edging up to the clerk, and in a patronizing way says: "Now, give me a good room." He is given "the glad hand," and after registering is shown the wash room. After a hurried meal he wants to see the place, and if the stage is late he is more anxious to take in the town. After all the resorts are visited, he generally lands at the variety theater or perhaps at a stud or faro game. Finally he is satisfied and meanders to the hotel and requests to be shown to his room. On arriving at one of the many tents connected with the house he proceeds to roar about being put on a cot in such a place. After a lot of talk about being able to pay his way, and not being accustomed to such treatment, the gentleman is promised a room in a week or so. About the third night he can be found sleeping comfortably in a barroom chair.

One night last week we were putting an extra blanket on a cot when the occupant of the next one woke up with the remark: "Making up the beds, eh? Well, you can make up this one too," and at once preceeded to get up. Dropping into Crawford's he saluted the barkeep with a hearty good morning, and guessed he'd have a cocktail before breakfast. He was asked if he usually got up in the middle of the night for his morning apetizer. He had plenty of time to think it over, for another man slept in his bed.

P. H. Mack is expected home next Tuesday.

A new year—a new administration—a few new women—what may we not hope for?

Mrs. James Hines, her son Will and Matthew Duke came in from Black Rock on Wednesday last.

Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Neil and Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Conklin, of Aberdeen, attended the Leap Year dance.

R. Hession, Jr., came down from Big Pine last Tuesday afternoon and remained to take in the Leap Year dance.

At the late Citrus Fair at Fresno Tulare county won the first prize of $100, Madera took second of $50 and Stanislaus third of $25.

The charivari at ths Reward mill a few nights ago was a complete success. Mr. Edgington responded by a liberal supply of liquid refreshments and cigars.

Harvey Edgington came over from the Reward mine yesterday and took in the Leap Year dance. Mrs. Edgington, who was indisposed, failed to accompany him.

Supt. Hoskins came in from the Reward mine this morning, bringing in bar of bullion No. 25, valued at $2,000. This bar is the result of a two week's run of the mill.

The Misses Bell gave an afternoon reception at their home at the Fort on the 28th. The dining-room was tastefully decorated with evergreens and red and white roses.

George Desalier, a mining expert, who was a resident of this county about 16 years ago and who bonded the Golden Star property 10 years ago to W. W. Stow and Steve Gillis, is again in this vicinity inspecting mining property.

Wells Barnes, who is enhaged in mining in Inyo county, Cal., is in town. He came to attend the funeral of his brother, Duncan Barnes. It is the first visit he has paid to Dayton for some time, and it was a sad mission he came on.—Dayton Times.

On Sunday last a party consisting of Mrs. J. C. Irwin, Mrs. P. H. Mack, Mr. I. H. Mulholland and wife, Miss Hattie Berger, Miss Grace Collins and Miss Mary Mulholland drove over to the Reward mill and spent a couple of very pleasant hours in the mill, the assay office and the boarding house. Superintendent Hoskins and Assayer Hedrick entertained them most hospitably and showed some of the tricks of the tsade which transfiers the yellow metal from ore to bullion.

FROM AN INDEPENDENT STANDPOINT.

At the Horse Show in San Francisco last week there was a fine exhibition of beautiful and highly trained animals; but the whole affair wore a curiously foreign and artificial aspect. English fashions prevailed in every detail. The horses were bob-tailed, the carriages were mostly imported or of foreign type, the functionaries of the show, from the highly decorated ring master to the smallest groom, were English; and even the exhibitors in their clothes, walk and talk were as English as they could make themselves. American types of horses were decidedly not in it. For the American trotter in harness there was, indeed, one small prize; but for the American combined saddle and light-harness horse, admitted by real horse lovers to be the most beautiful and useful of the equine families, there was no class. But a single representative of the breed was present, and, as a concession, his owner was permitted to exhibit him in the ring once or twice "between acts." Our native California horses have a world-wide fame, especially for their serviceableness under saddle, but the managers of the Horse Show, apparently, had never heard of the breed, or of any other kind of saddle horse save the English-type hunter or park hack.

The system of judging was purely arbitrary, and whoever did not conform to English fashions in the points of mutilating his horses by sawing off their tails, of his own and his groom's attire, and in the minute details of his equipage, had no show at all. One exhibitor lost a prize, not from any fault in his team, but because he drove in "afternoon" instead of "morning" dress. Another blue ribbon was lost because, upon critical inspection, it was found that one of his grooms was building a mustache. The judges, like everything else, were imported for the occasion, and the memory of their English clothes and English accent and English standards of judgment is a thing forever to be held dear in the world of fashionable horsiness.

The manifest silliness of all this mass of cheap and more or less vulgar affectation might easily be pardoned if it did not expose a really mischievous social tendency. The spectacle of a considerable part of the community, and that part a class of large influence, so slavishly obedient to foreign standards and fashions as to hold in contempt the habits and fashions of its own country, is, indeed, a thing to make the judicious grieve. It clearly marks a lack of patriotic spirit among the class for which this country has done most in the way of material fortune. The American who affects English manners, clothes and speech, and who is never so pleased as when somebody takes him for an Englishman, is a discredit and a shame to his country; and so far as his personal influence goes, he is a corrupter of our national life. And, if he could only know it, such a creature is as little of an Englishman as he is an American. Whatever may be the faults of the English character, flunkyism is not among them. The Englishman is always an upholder of his own national manners and ideas and is never, by any chance, an imitator of the fashions of those who are to him foreigners. In his own country, or separated from it by half the world, he still maintains, and is proud to maintain, his character as a Briton. And if he sometimes goes to the extreme of arrogance in the general "blarstedness" of his manners, he is still to be respected as a man who holds to patriotic traditians and who respects the land that gave him birth. In all his qualities, the true Englishman is the precise antithesis of the cheap American anglo-maniac; and his contempt for his flunkyish imitator is usually very wholesome and profound.—Rural Press

From Aberdeen.

The Christmas tree and entertainment at the Taboose school house were enjoyed by all who attended.

Mr. J. W. Callaway has sold out his wood contract to Mr. A. A. Neil, who will supply the railroad in the future.

Mr. D. Tapman has had a severe attack of the grip.

AURORA.

Mr. Peter Laberge and Miss Frankie Shannon were married at the home of the bride in Bishop on Tuesday evening last. The young couple went to Lone Pine on Wednesday, where they will make their home temporarily. We extend our best wishes for their future happiness.

THE BEST PASSPORT.

It Is to Always Look Pleasant and Do No Grumbling.

"What is the first duty of a good traveler?" asked a young lady who was about to start from New York on an extended European tour.

"To look pleasant and never to grumble," was the answer of a veteran wanderer who had crossed the ocean 20 times and gone twice around the world.

It was a good prescription and will help to make a good traveler of any novice. The fatigue of the longest journey can be patiently endured if one can only be amiable and avoid the weariness that comes from fretting over what is unavoidable and worrying over trifles.

An American girl not long ago spoiled the pleasure of a party of tourists by complaining of everything on sea and on land. The ship was a dreadful roller, the cabins were badly ventilated, the cooking was abominable, the service was shocking, the officers were uncivil, and the passengers were disagreeable and stupid! Nothing suited her, and she had not a good word for anybody. Every member of the party was indignant over her want of amiability.

"It makes me almost seasick merely to look at her!" exclaimed one of the ladies.

"Perhaps she will cheer up," was the charitable response, "when she reaches port."

But she was as unhappy on land as she had been at sea. She was angry with the customs officers and told them that they had mauled and ruined her best gown. She found fault with the lovely rural scenery between Southampton and London. She pronounced English cooking to be utterly vile. She inveighed bitterly against the weather and the climate. She was not interested in cathedrals, castles, palaces, pictures, colleges, ruins or country roads. She was bored by everything she saw.

One night she received a round robin signed by every other member of the party, expressing regret that she was not enjoying her journey and offering their sympathies in her vexations and discomforts. It was a bold stroke on the part of her friends, who were worn out by her tiresome peevishness. Fortunately it was not unsuccessful. Not another word of complaint was heard from her during the remainder of the tour.

A pleasant, cheerful face and manner that express kindliness and good will make the best passport which a traveler can carry into a foreign country. They insure civility and courtesy from officials, fellow travelers and strangers and are an unfailing resource whenever there is any misadventure.—Youth's Companion.

TWO VIEWS OF PENSIONS.

Not Many Rich In Our Wars, Writes Ex-President Harrison.

"There may be fair differences of opinion as to the extent and conditions of pension relief, but there is no room for doubts as to pensions," writes ex-President Harrison in The Ladies' Home Journal. "Eleven dollars a month for war service implies at least relief in case of wounds or sickness for the soldier and that the public will care for his widow and minor children. When the law of pillage prevailed, it was otherwise, and when our rich men take to fighting our wars we can abolish the pension system, but thus far it is as historically true of the armies that won our independence, delivered us from the Indians and the British and saved the nation in the great civil war as of the kingdom of heaven, 'Not many rich.'

"There are two views of the pension question—one from the Little Round Top at Gettysburg, looking out over a field sown thickly with the dead and around upon bloody, blackened and maimed men cheering the shot torn banner of their country; the other from an office desk on a busy street or from an endowed chair in a university, looking only upon a statistical table."

Albany claims the honor of having made the first carriages manufactured entire in this country. Several were built in the year 1814, and the event was duly noted at the time as an evidence of the spread of United States enterprise.

THE FAULTS AND FOLLIES OF THE AGE

Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters be used instead of these no remedies, the result is accomplished without pain and with great benefit to the bowels, the stomach and the liver. Use this remedy when constipation is manifested, and thereby prevent it from becoming chronic.

She—Are you sure that it was a year ago today that we became engaged, dear? He—Yes; I looked it up in my check book this morning.

Blood Poison.

Contagious Blood Poison has been appropriately called the curse of mankind. It is the one disease that physicians cannot cure; their mercurial and potash remedies only bottle up the poison in the system, to surely break forth in a more virulent form, resulting in a total wreck of the system.

Mr. Frank B. Martin, a prominent jeweler at 926 Pensylvania Ave., Washington, D.C., says: "I was for a long time under treatment of two of the best physicians of this city, for a severe case of blood poison, but my condition grew worse all the while, notwithstanding the fact that they charged me three hundred dollars. My mouth was filled with eating sores; my tongue was almost eaten away, so that for three months I was unable to taste any solid food. My hair was coming out rapidly, and I was in a horrible fix. I had tried various treatments, and was nearly discouraged, when a friend recommended S.S.S. After I had taken four bottles, I began to get better, and when I had finished eighteen bottles, I was cured sound and well, my skin was without a blemish, and I have had no return of the disease. S.S.S. saved me from a life of misery." S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) will cure any case of blood poison. WIND IN THE MOON.

We had slept with our horses grazing all through a blistering day;
Boots and saddles had sounded, we waited for horse and away;
The sun was down and over the grass dew had begun to fall,
And shrill across the dusking world we heard the whip-poor-will call.
We knew what the moon was doing, the leering moon in the east,
Calling, calling the master winds, luring them as to a feast, Prisoning them in her halo ring till the wildest gust grew tame,
And the stars were blown all out of the sky, like a flickering candle flame.
An eldritch moon, all gibbous, gray, in a haze of heat and dew,
Although it was June we shivered there,
as loud the bugle blew;
Foot home in stirrup, hand on hilt, we thundered down the glade,
And up the hill, where the brave bluecoats stood massed to check our raid.
We rode but a scant five hundred; they waited a thousand there,
Yet we laughed as though 'twas the view halloo at the trumpet's snarling blare;
Trot! Gallop! Charge! 'Twas a ringing run, with the dogs of death in cry,
Under the leering gibbous moon, aslant in the windy sky.
Never a check when the gun fire broke as lightning from a cloud;
Never a stay when screaming shell through front and rear rank plowed.
On, up, over the bristling slope, a wedge of fire and steel,
We cleft a way through the tough blue ranks till we saw the captain reel.
Then we broke, and the leering gibbous moon unleashed the winds of heaven.
In writhing riot they leaped to earth, the peace of night was riven, Riven, smitten of lightning's sword and the thunder's hammer clang,
As the riotous winds a Marseillaise of wreck and ruin sang.
With crash of forest and sweep of grass
the storm chant rose and fell.
The earth was thrashed with a flail of cloud, aflame like the mouth of hell,
And we, who had fought so wild a fight,
bare breast against bare blade,
Fell, gray or blue, into kneeling ranks,
locked hands and as wildly prayed,
We had fought like men for honor, we prayed like men for life.
Nor friend nor foe, but brothers all, there on the field of strife;
Perhaps God heard, the storm was hushed, the moon rode high and white,
And a ruffling wind blew from the south, soft as it blows to-night.

—New York Sun.

TOO YOUNG TO MARRY

Johnnie Madison dwelt in Norman's inn when he first came to London. He was the only son of his mother, and she was a canon's widow. It was at her desire that he set up his household goods under the time-worn gables of Norman's inn; for there also dwelt a kinsman of the late canon's, Arkwright by name, who was always alluded to in the family as "a steady, plodding young man," and was supposed to live amid a picturesque litter of briefs and books; and the canon's widow hoped he might exercise a mildly restraining influence over Johnnie, being nearly twice his age.

Now the steady, plodding young man looked forward to his arrival without enthusiasm. He remembered Johnnie as a very inky schoolboy of phenomenal lung power and unprepossessing appearance, and felt assured that by now he should have developed into a rakish young man with a taste for small dogs and large neckties, and greatly given to entertaining noisy company; well-knowing that the chastened atmosphere of a cathedral town does not necessarily induce an affection for quiet living in the youthful breast.

Johnnie, however, proved to be a fresh-colored, amiable youth of 22, more plentifully endowed with muscle than with brain power, and with no apparent tendency to come immediately to grief amid what Arkwright would have called—he sometimes wrote for the papers—the shoals and quicksands of London life. He neither gambled nor drank, nor gave his mind too entirely to the lightly clad allurements of light opera. On the contrary, he read with industry as though already covetous of the woolsack, he danced and dined assiduously at houses of irreproachable respectability; and, in Arkwright's company, when he did not talk cricket he talked shop.

Then by degrees, when returned from nocturnal adventures, he began to favor Arkwright with many confidences regarding his attitude toward various members of the other sex; for Johnnie's affairs of the heart became at last alarmingly numerous. Not that he aimed at playing the part of Don Juan; but, being of highly inflammable material, his heart was successively ignited by a pleasing variety of damsels.

Fate brought him face to face with the one and inevitable damsel at last, however. Audrey St. Clair was a dark-eyed girl of 20; Johnnie thought her charmingly fresh and natural. Mrs. Leverson's ball was a rapturous occasion to him, and Mrs. Leverson's niece Audrey entirely dispossessed all other idols, from that date, of the pedestal upon which Johnnie had successively placed them.

Of Mrs. Leverson herself her enemies said that she had been pretty; elderly gentlemen had been known to call her a fine woman, while young ones thought her "not halfbad fun." She possessed an abundance of obviously dyed hair, a somewhat effusive manner and a faultless taste in dress. The late lamented Captain Leverson had indulged a taste for speculation, with disastrous results, and hence the few people who remembered her were surprised to find the widow when she returned from a long absence abroad so comfortably installed as she was in her house at Chelsea.

Johnnie she seemed to hold in high favor. He was allowed to take her and her niece through the polite mobs of the picture galleries; he never failed to appear at her "at homes," and he frequently made one at her theater parties. But, although he thought Mrs. Leverson "aw'fly kind, and all that sort of thing," she would have preferred to see her niece subject to less worldly influences than those brought to bear upon her.

In accordance with the fitness of things, he vaguely imagined she should always be dressed in white, wandering through sheltered rose gardens and indulging an amiable solicitude for birds and dogs and poor old cottagers—a village Lady Bountiful, in short. And to tell the truth the unconscious maiden would infinitely have preferred a more natural way of life, and her happiest moments were spent on her mare in the park, where Johnnie, leaning against the railing, watched her wistfully. He could not afford a horse.

He never told Arkward anything about this particular flame of his. It was Tommy Blake who posted up the plodding young man in his youthful kinsman's affairs one afternoon at the club. "And both women seem dead nuts on your young friend," he said incidentally. "Pretty well off, I suppose?"

"He's worth precisely twopence halfpenny a year," said Arkwright, with more figure of speech than he usually permitted to himself.

Tommy raised his eyebrows as high as nature permitted and said it was uncommon queer.

"And there was a sort of Indian prince—no end of a nabob, I'm told—wanted to marry the girl, and Mrs. Leverson sent him to the right about in double-quick time. And she is not the sort to feel shy about bowing down to the golden calf, either. Can't make her out."

"Perhaps she thinks her niece too young to marry yet," said the plodding young man. "She may be acting merely from a proper regard for her happiness."

"A proper regard for fiddlesticks," said cynical Mr. Blake.

Arkwright was sitting up late one night to finish an erudite paper upon "The Ethics of Modern Drama," when Johnnie stole noiselessly into the room and sank into the easiest chair. Arkwright wrote to the bottom of the page and threw down his pen, thinking he had found an intelligent audience for a reading for his valuable essay. But it was no such matter. Johnnie was occupied with the drama of real life, and, to judge by his aspect, seemed to imagine that he was cast to play principal tragedian in that enthralling piece.

"Off color, Johnnie?" said the elder man, tentatively.

"No," he said, smoking savagely.

"Feel doubtful about your 'call?'"

"No, I think I'm pretty safe."

Arkwright stretched out his hand to reach his pipe.

"By the way, here's a letter for you, Johnnie, from your mother; I have just received one from her myself."

Johnnie, however, made no attempt to take it, or he might have spared his friend the opinions he expressed concerning the station in life to which it had pleased Providence to call him.

"It's beastly, you know," he explained. "I may hang on for years and never be nearer marrying than I am at the present moment. As for proposing to her now—as the mater said—it's decidedly low to get a girl to bind herself to any promise until one has decent prospects."

Arkwright reflected with a flickering smile that Johnnie had probably caught rather the spirit than the letter of his mamma's admonitions. However, it was a sign of grace that he remembered them at all, and he felt sorry for the woebegone youth.

"You're young to think of marrying yet, you know," he said. "Am I right," he continued, after a pause, "in supposing—Blake is my informant—a certain Miss St. Clair has occasioned all this trouble?"

"Oh, if Blake has told you. And the aunt is awfully decent to me."

"But you are not proposing to marry the aunt. Is Miss St. Clair herself—is she——"

"Oh, well, a fellow never knows that sort of thing, you know, till he tries his chances," said Johnnie in a manner which betrayed that he thought he knew quite well that his affections were returned, as, indeed, they were, and Audrey St. Clair was far too frank to take any great pains to conceal it. "Oh, Arkwright, what am I to do?" he said, pathetically.

"Open your letter, Johnnie," he replied, and the tone in which he said it caused the wondering youth to obey promptly.

He looked seraphically happy till he remembered that he ought to look bereaved. Johnnie's ship had come home just in the nick of time. He had always had shadowy expectations from his uncle, but he had been to pessimistic to count too much upon him. However, gout had claimed a victim, and the canon's widow hinted to her son that he had to some extent benefited by the event.

The vanity of riches was exemplified to Johnnie, when, after a decent interval, he returned to town the richer by $22,000 a year, but, as he speedily found, minus Mrs. Leverson's good graces.

Another was reigning favorite with her now, Lester, a picturesque but not very talented painter, who was deep in converse with Audrey when he made his reappearance.

Mrs. Leverson greeted Johnnie without effusion. Audrey was more friendly, but inopportunely asked him if he had seen Lester's latest picture.

Johnnie's soul was already green with jealousy.

"Who's Lester?" he said, "that fellow with the untidy hair?" Audrey reproachfully changed the conversation, but Johnnie was out of humor and continued to sulk.

This lasted for some days, and it was noticed that Mrs. Leverson continued to treat him with as much indifference as she becomingly could.

"Why does she quarrel with a chap for coming into a fortune?" said Tommy Blake, the close observer of human nature. "And why does he hang back when he must see that that little girl is over her ears in love with him?" But he found no solution to these problems.

Johnnie sulked for a month. Then one afternoon he jumped into a cab, drove down to Chelsea, and Mrs. Leverson being alone, presently found himself blunderingly declaring that he would like to bestow his hand upon her niece.

The good lady looked very grave.

"You are both young, you know, Mr. Madison," she said. "Her mother married very young and very unhappily. Perhaps that has set me against early marriages."

"But what has set you against me?" said Johnnie, reproachfully.

"Nonsense, that is only your imagination." But Johnnie was not strong in that quality, so Mrs. Leverson was probably misstating the case.

Audrey was, on this occasion, ill and invisible.

"She is too fatigued to bear any excitement just now. Come in three days' time," said her aunt, "and I will think over the advisability of sounding her on the subject in the meantime."

Three days later Johnnie came to Arkwright in a state of great perturbation. Mrs. Leverson had left her house, and Chelsea knew her no more. It was only by bribery and corruption that Johnnie discovered that she had gone to Scarborough, but probably would not stay there, her plans being unsettled.

"She'll surely write to you," said Arkwright.

But no letter came within twenty-four hours.

"We'd better go to Scarborough," said Johnnie's counselor.

The truant lady was discovered by Johnnie in a stationer's shop on the very day of his arrival.

"Audrey was so ill the doctor advised instant change. In the flurry I forgot to write to you," she said, after a gasp of surprise.

Johnnie decided in his haste that all women were liars, and asked when he might hope to see Audrey.

"You may come and call to-morrow morning—she may be better then. But I think it most undesirable, most undesirable that you should make any proposal to her yet, or entertain hopes that may be disappointed." Mrs. Leverson spoke with conviction, but deferred explanation, and Johnnie laid the matter before Arkwright.

The latter privately debated whether there was insanity or some other cupboard skeleton in the girl's family, rendering matrimony inadvisable, or whether Johnnie had been committing enormities that had come to Mrs. Leverson's ears but not to his. And he was the more mystified when, next morning, the unhappy lover came to him, pale and blaspheming, and told him that Mrs. Leverson had again fled before him, had left her hotel and a brief note to say that she was bound for the continent.

"What is Mrs. Leverson?" said Arkwright. "You never told me her credentials."

"Widow of a man in the Carchester regiment; that's all I know," said Johnnie.

"Then we can consult Major Bagshaw, who is an old friend of mine. Look up the trains to Carchester, and don't pace about the room like that."

Major Bagshaw, who was a bachelor, greeted his visitors cordially, when, on the following morning, they called at his quarters.

He listened gravely while Arkwright told him the strange story of Mrs. Leverson. Then he cleared his throat and asked impressively, "Have you heard of Snaggs' cure for corns?" he looked from one to another for an answer.

As no one who has ever traveled by rail or opened a newspaper can have failed to have heard of that famous specific, neither thought it worth while to reply to this apparently irrelevant query.

"I know Snaggs," continued the Major, deliberately: "He's a very rich man, but a self-made one and one who has sufficient sense to know that his education has therefore been deficient. So he determined to give his only daughter every advantage that money can buy, and two years ago consulted me as to the advisability of intrusting her to a lady of position.

"To Mrs. Leverson?" gasped Johnnie.

"For the sake of poor Dandy Leverson, I mentioned her name to him, and I knew he was involved in debt—evidently she is still. She was to receive £100 a month and all expense to take the young lady through Europe and to launch her in London. I was not aware that it was any part of the agreement that she could call Miss St. Clair—Snaggs changed his name—her niece, but that's a detail! I should not have betrayed confidence but for the strange account you gave me of Mrs. Leverson's behavior. Of course, she's in no hurry to see her niece married; £100 a month is not to be lightly lost; but she must be desperately hard up to play her cards like that."

"And what do you advise?" asked Johnnie.

"Your feeling in the matter are not changed by my revelations?"

"Of course not."

"Then with your permission I shall call on my fellow townsman, Mr. Snaggs, who is, of course, in constant communication with his daughter and put the facts before him. And I have no doubt we shall see the young lady here in a few days; but possibly her preceptress will prefer to remain away."

The canon's widow thought corn curing rather a plebeian trade, but was mollified when her future daughter-in-law was brought to her house.

And a lady of good position advertises that she is prepared to take charge of a young lady desiring an entree to those exalted circules wherein she herself habitually moves. A confidential interview can be arranged.—Pick-Me-Up.

Musical African Warriors.

August 5.—Kisawa volunteered to send two men with me to Kasembi's. Did not suggest any pay; told off two of his young warriors, and gave them instructions; they clapped their hands after each sentence to signify their acceptance of his instructions. Two others have come of their own accord; the only baggage of one is two sticks, upon each of which are threaded four dry rows of fruit, which rattle. The youth owning this property has long hair plaited into ropes, which fall to his neck, and form a screen to his eyes. He is constantly keeping the rattle going, and singing (principally about me) in a most flattering manner, in which performance his friend joins; but the latter confines himself to singing; he has other use for his hands, which carry two baskets full of manioc flour, a banghi pipe, and spare rattles. For the first hour they stayed at my heels. All the time kept up the rattling and singing, and told me it was what they came for, and that they would thus entertain me until we reached Kasembi, four or five days off. I spoke to them firmly, but kindly, told them their music was excellent, but must be heard at a distance to be properly enjoyed. The distance I pointed out was about ten miles away. My musical friends took the hint good-naturedly, but at times they break out into their boisterous entertainment.—Century.

A GOOD SHOWING.

WHAT A REPORTER LEARNED ABOUT A CERTAIN MEDICINE.

From the Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

There is one proprietary medicine in use in this city, the name of which has become a household word and that is the preparation known as "Pink Pills for Pale People." Shakespeare said, "a rose by any other name would smell as sweet." That may be so, but pills by any other name would not have the same attraction nor popular sales that Pink Pills have in Spokane, Wash.

A representative of the Minneapolis Journal started out the other day to investigate the merits of this popular and widely-sold household medicine. The evidence was on every hand. Hamilton B. Merrill, a young money loaner of Spokane, was seen by the newspaper man. Mr. Merrill made no secret of his remarkable cure by these little pellets.

"Do I know the efficacy of Pink Pills?" he reiterated. "I should rather think I do, they have been a blessing to me. I am not in the habit of praising proprietary medicine, but I must say that Pink Pills, as far as my case goes, have no equal in the world. A little over a year ago I began ailing and commenced to lose flesh rapidly. The doctor told me to stop smoking; this I did, but the result was even worse. My heart-beats decreased to less than forty a minute. I was prescribed for by my doctor, but without receiving any benefit whatever. I continued daily to grow worse and my parents became alarmed over my condition. Some one suggested Pink Pills; I thought I would try them anyway. And I tell you that I cannot endorse them too highly, they worked like a charm in my case. My heart soon became normal again, my flesh increased and I felt like a new man. To tell you the truth I am still taking them. I have a sort of fondness for them yet and I am loath to give them up.

"I know of a young lady living in this city, whose condition was even worse than mine; she took Pink Pills and is one of society's gayest young ladies now. I wish I were at liberty to give her name, as I am sure she would only be too delighted to give them a hearty send-off. I believe Pink Pills cannot be too highly recommended. They are gems, indeed."

Mr. Merrill is a young man of twenty-two or twenty-three years of age and today is the pink of health. He has a splendid complexion and would be the last person to be taken for one who has been so seriously ill only a few months ago. He is a splendid athlete besides and and moves in the best circles of society here.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headahce, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

A NEW BICYCLE TRACK.

San Francisco Constructs What Will Undoubtedly Be the Fastest Course in the World.

When San Francisco does anything in the sporting line she never does it by halves. A syndicate of capitalists, realizing the importance of the bicycle as a racing factor, have combined and constructed what is to be known as the "Velodrome," occupyng the entire block between Baker, Fell, Lyon and Hayes streets.

The "Velodrome" will be devoted to any and all kinds of outdoor athletic sports, but its principal feature will be its bicycle track, which was dedicated with a large and successful meet on Saturday, November 21st.

Although used simply for practice prior to its opening, the "Velodrome" track has already been heralded at home and abroad as a wonderfully safe, and at the same time, remarkably fast, course.

The track itself is six laps to the mile, and banked in such a manner that it is as safe as a mile track. The banks are nine feet seven inches on the turns, about two and one-half feet on the straights. The track is somewhat oval in shape, the home-stretch being a little longer than the back. The surface is of selected Oregon pine, one and one-quarter inches square laid vertical grain, with no nails showing on the surface.

Owing to construction of the track, it is possible to use the largest multicycles with perfect safety, and after several unofficial trials, it has been proven that world's records are easily within the reach of riders upon this track.

The grand stand and dressing-rooms are the most complete of their kind in America.

The grand stand extends around and following the contour of the track for about one-half its circumference, and will contain a stand proper, promenade and gallery. The dressing-rooms will be underneath and have windows looking out upon the track. There will also be a club room with all possible conveniences for visitors.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever: nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars: free.

THE CONFESSION.

Once I was a youngster happy,
Not a shred of care I knew;
Mirth was ever on the tapis,
Winged with joy the moments new.
If I had a heart it never
Was the kind inclined to "love,"
And the meaning of "forever"
Was a thing I dreamed not of.

How I scorned my cousin Polly!
"Nothing but a girl!" I said;
How I mocked at melancholy,
Moony, spoony brother Ned!
But the height of my abhorrence
Was a chap who went around,
Quoting verses to "his Florence,"
With his eyes upon the ground.

Woe for all my olden revels!
Mirth and joy—alack a day!
Now I dance with the "blue devils"
If she looks the other way.
She!—my heart is limp as vellum
When I touch her tiny glove,
And there haunts my cerebellum
"Love forever"—ever "love!"

But—(O direst alteration!)
(Awful irony of fate!)
I, who from exalted station
Made such mockery but late,
Now—(and this my pen rehearses
With abasement most profound),
Love to wander, quoting verses,
With my eyes upon the ground.

MY OWN DECEASE.

Although undoubtedly I had been very ill, I am by no means certain of my facts at about this time; so whether I was a victim of a little too much indulgence in the flowing bowl, or of a lively imagination, or of a hypnotic trance, I really cannot say, anyway, one morning I seemed to be conscious that I was talking with a demon, who sat by my bedside. He was a very pleasant sort of fellow and not bad looking, but somehow I knew that he was a demon.

"Would you like to hear what they are saying about you and go to your own funeral?" he asked pleasantly.

"People generally do attend that ceremony personally," I suggested; then after a moment's reflection, I asked: "Am I dead, then?"

"Of course. Did you not know it?"

"If I did it must have escaped my memory," I replied imperturbably.

"Well, you are dead, but I will give you the remarkable power of going among your family in the spirit and invisible to them."

"That's very kind of you, but I've heard you people seldom perform services for nothing. What recompense do you require?"

"None. The penalty you will pay will be sufficient reward to me."

"What penalty?"

"To see yourself as others see you, and hear what they say of you."

My friend then dematerialized himself into thin pale air, and the next moment I was gliding noiselessly down the stairs.

I should explain to you that I am an orphan, without parents, but a member of a large family; sisters, brothers, cousins and all the rest of it. I happen to have more money than any of the others, and have hitherto been much sought after on account of my excellent personal qualities. I am not married. Well, the fact is, I am of a rather retiring disposition, and not having yet come across a girl who would help me out with the preliminaries, I had not found courage to take the fatal plunge. My eldest sister, Priscilla, had therefore been keeping house for me.

I passed easily through the closed parlor door without opening it, which was very convenient, and found myself, unseen by them, in the midst of relatives from different parts of the country. They were waiting breakfast for some important person who had not yet made his appearance. I was foolish enough to think it might be myself and sat down in my customary seat at the foot of the table, but of course, no one saw me. I had forgotten for the moment that I was a dematerialized spirit. Soon, however, the door opened and the important individual entered the apartment. It was my eldest brother Tom. Now I began to understand. He was my executor and residuary legatee. He represented me, the late Crawley Slowquicker, Esq., deceased, hence all the court and deference paid to him. This was absurd, you know, for a bigger fool never lived.

Well, he made straight for my chair, and sat down where I was sitting! This was stepping into my shoes with a vengeance—actually usurping the same place occupied by my disembodied spirit. Tom was a bulky fellow, and I felt the affront. Besides, wishing better to watch the proceedings, I got up quickly and sat behind my chair.

Two things especially attracted my attention, and somewhat shocked me. In the first place, Priscilla's presiding seemed more lavish than under my regime, and in the second, I was struck by the happiness and gayety of the whole company. This was calculated to take my fatuity down a few pegs, for I had fondly imagined that my death would plunge my entire family in the uttermost depths of despair. But it hadn't!

"I never like going into black," Priscilla was saying in her even tones to Aunt Gwen, "it's so very unlucky."

"I don't mind the change at all," said Aunt Gwen, "the color just suits me, you know. But I really can't tell what orders to give, not knowing how I am provided for."

"That's as good as asking," said Tom, with one of his horrible laughs which I used to consider so hearty. "A nod's as good as a wink to a blind horse. I suppose the regular thing is to read the will after the funeral, but as it's all among ourselves it doesn't matter, and I'll read it to all directly after breakfast."

Then they started talking about their late relation, Crawley Slowquicker, and the things I heard about myself positively astonished me.

They were all sadly deficient in the bump of reverence, and I found that not one of them entertained that respect and affection for me of which I had imagined they were all possessed. Now I fully realized the truth of my friend the demon's words. It was a dreadful penalty to pay, a sad mortification to hear what they said of me, and to see myself as others saw me.

"Well, of course," my cousin Vernon said, responding to some remark in a virtuously deprecatory tone. "Of course, de mortuis nil nisi bonum, and all that sort of thing, you know; but I can't help saying that Crawley was always mean—horribly mean!"

Confound the fellow! And this was a man to whom I had left £500, forgiving him all the money he owed me which was as good as doubling the legacy!

"No, no; not mean," Tom answered, and I blessed him for those words, but he spoiled it all by adding, "A bit careful, you know."

"Ah, I should think so," says Priscilla. "You would hardly believe it, but it's a fact he never allowed me money enough to keep house decently."

Of course, this was not true, as you may imagine. She was always wanting more money, and yet it never succeeded in purchasing anything remarkable. And this was my sister Pris., whom I had always thought so affectionate, so entirely devoted to me. Oh, it was too horrible.

These three were my principal legatees. If I had only known sooner! But how was that possible?

I knew what I would do. I had made up my mind—and having no body, I was all mind now—I would go at once to my solicitor's, and have a codicil drawn up while there was yet time. But say, there was no time; it was too late. I had quite forgotten that I was only a poor ghost, a dematerialized spirit, and that old idiot, Sharpitlaw, was so wedded to routine and old-fashioned custom that he would certainly regard a posthumous testament as informal, and as I was invisible he would treat my signature as null and decidedly void.

When next I turned toward my amiable and disinterested family circle, I perceived that the breakfast things had been removed, and Tom Slowquicker sat in the armchair with my will spread out before him.

"There's some one missing," he said, looking around him magisterially; "who is it?"

"Only my sister Minnie," Vernon remarked casually. "I went to her this morning, but she's so upset about his death that she feels quite ill, and could not come down to breakfast."

"Don't be absurd," said Priscilla; "why, she never gave him so much as a civil word." Then, sotto voce to her brother, "And that's what has upset her, I expect. She is afraid she has spoiled her chances of a legacy."

Oh, that spiteful Priscilla! If I could only alter my will! But it was too late, for here was my executor standing, or rather sitting, in my place. At least, there was one thing I could do; I would find my friend the demon and see if arrangements could not be made for haunting them!

But these precious words about Minnie had sent balm into my tortured spirit, so that my incorporate heart throbbed, shaking the venetians, and Tom asked where the draft came from. I would go to her at once, so I traversed the closed door again, passing them all as the sigh of a summer breeze, which is we know not what, or whence it comes, or whither it goes—a breath from—well, no matter where; I don't exactly know myself.

Thus I went upstairs, and into Minnie's room, where I found the poor girl still in bed, her cheeks pale, her eyes red with weeping, all the signs upon her of a sleepless night of sorrow, and pressed close to her soft bosom she held a likeness of my unworthy self, which I had given her once long ago. And this was the girl who never spoke save to ridicule and poke fun at me, whose dislike for me was almost proverbial in the family, and yet the girl whose love—with usual human perversity—I would have given all the world to win.

Ah, this knowledge of her heart's secret was sweet to me! It gave me courage. I would comfort her. I would pour forth my love. I would tell her—stay! What could I tell her? Was I not forgetting again that I was only a poor ghost—merely the shadow of a shade? Was I not unseen by her? And even were it possible for me to make myself visible for a few moments I should only succeed in terrifying my poor love out of her senses.

Alas! was this the realization of a hereafter? The punishment of early vanities and sins? To see things just as they are and yet to be so miserably impotent to alter them; to see too what might have been and to beat out my weary spirit on into eternity in vain longing for a fruition that can never come!

My funeral was appointed to take place the next day. It was a very grand affair altogether, and cake and wine had been laid in the parlor to entertain the guests upon this festive ocasion. I dare say I should have done the same had I been burying a relation, but somehow it hurt me to see my best dry sherry being put away.

As I accompanied the mourners down the steps I suddenly perceived my friend the demon by my side. Vainly I sought a coach, but could find no room. I turned to him somewhat angrily and remarked:

"I say, you promised I should go to my own funeral, but I don't seem to have been considered in the arrangement at all."

"You forget that corporeally you hold the place of honor at the head of the procession, but in the spirit you can get in here. There's only the doctor and the clergyman."

"Between the doctor and the parson! Really, my dear demon, you are remarkable for a most sardonic humor."

Well, the men of medicine and religion talked politics all the way, which I thought inappropriate, but as they were both conservatives they did not disagree. I am a liberal myself, and began vociferously expounding Mr. Gladstone's policy, quite oblivious that my gesticulations were unseen, my words unheard by them.

"Good job for yourself you are dead," said the demon. "You're just the sort to get into a jolly row with red-hot politicians."

The cemetery was soon reached, and I looked down and saw my coffin lowered into the grave.

"Earth to earth——"

A few lumps were thrown, and fell upon the lid with a grewsome rattle, and——

I awoke with a start, and my eyes met those of my brother Tom, who asked cheerily, "Well, how do you do now, old fellow?" But I turned from him—for I could not help thinking of him as I had seen him last, reading my will down in the parlor—turned away and encountered my darling little Minnie, who sat unobtrusively in a remote corner of the room, and I felt, oh! so grateful and happy at seeing her there. I felt then that it was not all a dream.

I have used feigned names in this veracious tale, because I think she would not like to know the strange experience which led me to take the courage to woo and by and by wed her.—Spare Moments.

Hanging Above a Tiger.

A British officer in India had gone out upon an elephant in search of a tiger, which had just killed a man and two bullocks within half a mile of camp. The hunt was brief, and the officer presently got two shots at the tiger, but without killing him. The jungle was heavy, and it was already getting dusk when the servant touched the officer from behind and said, "There he is!" The adventure is best described by the man himself, as quoted by Gen. Wilkinson.

The tiger was lying within ten yards of me, unable to rise, as I afterward found out, from his loins being broken. Seeing that he was not dead, however, I was in the act of taking up my rifle, when something struck me on the back and jammed me to the front of the howdah. I had just time to lay hold of the branch of a tree and pull myself out of the howdah, otherwise my back would have been broken.

Then the frightened elephant ran away, and left me suspended immediately over the tiger, which lay looking up at me, growling and lashing his sides.

You may imagine my feelings. In vain I tried to get into the tree, and at last, my fingers becoming cramped, I lost my hold and fell on the tiger. It was like dropping into the jaws of death.

The instant I touched the ground, the tiger with a terrific roar seized my left foot in his mouth, and with one bite crushed the heel and ankle bone to powder. Then he gave me three other bites, two on the calf of the leg and one on the knee, every bite breaking the bone to pieces.

My agonies were dreadful. In vain I called for help, but after a struggle I got my right leg free and gave the tiger a tremendous kick on the head, which induced him to let go. Instantly I got up and hobbled to the foot of the tree, where I fell exhausted, with the tiger still a few paces off.

The sepoy, who had been with me in the howdah, had lodged safely in the tree, and witnessed the whole scene. Now he came down within a few feet of the ground, and begged me to get into the tree. At first I thought I could not, but when the sepoy told me that the tiger would be at me again, I gave the fellow my hands, and he managed to pull me up into the lower branches.

By and by my brother officer, whose elephant, like my own, had become unmanageable, came back, and finally killed the tiger, after which I was somehow got into the howdah and carried back to camp.

A Russian Crime.

A simple method of murder and robbery, with small chances of detection, devised by some Russian peasants on the Prussian border, has recently been brought to light. A fever for emigration has existed for some years in Poland, and people who could not obtain passports to leave Russia after selling all they had, would secrete their money upon their persons and hire these peasants to smuggle them across the frontier. As their departure had to be kept secret, and the emigrants were generally illiterate persons of no prominence, it was easy to lead them into out-of-the-way places, murder them and strip them, with little probability of their being missed.

For Preservation of Timber.

Another method of preserving timber has recently been tried. It consist in dissolving in naphtha the heavy oils and waxes left after the distillation of petroleum, and forcing the solution into the seasoned timber in the same manner as in creosoting. The timber is then heated, when the naphtha evaporates and is recovered in a cooling chamber, while the waxes, etc., remain behind in the wood, waterproofing it.

Two thousand nine hundred and ninety-two pennies have been taken up in the Canton, O., schools as a collection for the Francis Key monument which is being erected at Frederick, Md.

The Army Worm.

While we do not think there is much likelihood of a recurrence of the army worm pest next year, yet it may be well in case we should have another infection to know a little more about it. The New York Agricultural Experiment Station has devoted Bulletin No. 104 to an investigation of the beast, and from it we extract some facts which our readers would do well to bear in mind.

The eggs are very small, globular in form, and nearly white in color. They are usually laid in the leaf sheaths of grasses and grains, and the early brood, which does the mischief, ovipositt freely in the cut straw of old stacks, in hay ricks, in old corn shocks, and in bits of corn stalk that have been left upon the surface of the ground in pastures. This will explain a fact that has been noted by many, that the worms started in blue grass pastures on which cord fodder had been fed to cattle.

The young caterpillars come forth in about ten days from the time the eggs are laid. In case the eggs were placed on fresh grass or grain, the young larvae feed for a time in the sheath where the eggs were placed, but finally include the whole blade in the bill of fare. They are full grown in about four weeks. At this time a single larvae measures about an inch and a half in length and a quarter of an inch in diameter. They may be briefly described as being smooth, naked caterpillars, moderately dark in color, with longitudinal stripes running the full length of the body. The third stage in the insects' life begins when the caterpillars go into the ground or under stones to make the wonderful change from an active caterpillar to an apparently lifeless creature. This stage is called the pupa stage, or, in the case of the butterflies and moths, is more familiarly known as the chrysalis stage. A single chrysalis measures about three-fourths of an inch in length.

Capacity of a Corn Crib.

It is a safe rule in estimating the size of a crib, to allow two cubic feet to each bushel of corn. By a cubic bushel is meant 70 pounds of ear corn, which is equivalent to 56 pounds of shelled corn. The rule is to allow 14 pounds for cob in the fall, and 12 pounds in the spring after the corn has been dried out perfectly. Two cribs thirty feet long, six feet wide and ten feet high, will by this rule hold 1,800 bushels. Ten feet is too high to throw corn easily with a scoop shovel, but there can be two openings for each crib extending down to within four or five feet of the floor, and when the crib is full to the bottom of these, short boards can be placed across them, as the crib is filled, and most of the filling can be done with ease. When the cribs must be filled to the top, a boy or man can throw corn back to the ends and fill it, so as to utilize all the space.

Preserve a Record.

It would be no bad plan for every farmer, and particularly for every young farmer, to make a resolution—and keep it—to preserve an intelligible record of all his transactions, the times, the seasons, the crops grown, the dates of planting, with such history of their progress as will throw light upon the results reached. How one's time has been employed, what work was done, when, and in short every fact relating to the economy of the farm might be briefly but intelligibly noted. Such a record, even for a single year, would be of value in planning for the next year, enabling the farmer to better plan his work, because the points at which he succeeded, as well as those at which he failed during the previous year, would be full of suggestion and reminder.

The Advance in Wheat.

The price of wheat has advanced in all parts of the world, and is due to legitimate causes. First came a drouth in Australia, which cut down the last crop in the colonies very materially. Later the advices from Adelaide indicate great need of rain, and the next crop there may be dwarfed on that account. Two bad years in succession in Australia are improbable, but not impossible. The crop in the Argentine Republic is short for the same reason, and this is also true of India and Russia. The spectacle of California shipping wheat to Calcutta is one the world has never before beheld.

Pay Off and Quit.

Whenever there is any misunderstanding between employer and employe on the farm, and one or the other feels that they have not had their just deserts, it is time to pay off and quit. These sores never heal up entirely, and it doesn't pay to doctor them up, and have them break out in a new place worse than ever.

A Time for Liberality.

A little neighborly help and counsel may go a great ways toward keeping some people from failure. There are in every community those who are in a position to either distress or to help their less fortunate neighbors. In most cases it will do these people no good to draw the lines too tightly, while such action may cause the failure of some who would otherwise have avoided it. A man may be pretty hard up financially, and yet be all right. If his creditor knows this and takes advantage of it in a time of financial unrest the debtor and the whole business community are wronged, usually with no advantage to the creditor. No one is urged to take any great risk for the sake of accommodating a neighbor, yet all should realize the good that a little leniency may do, and the harm that may result from the opposite course.

Poultry Feeding Rack.

For the bottom take a board 1 inch thick, 6 inches wide and 6 feet long, ends 1 inch thick, 6 inches wide and 18 inches long. Nail solid to ends of bottom; their ends flush with underside of bottom. Two strips half an inch thick and four inches wide are nailed to the edges of the bottom, thus making a trough three inches deep with ends 18 inches high. Then take strips one-quarter inch thick, 3 inches wide and

GRAIN WASTE PREVENTED.

18 inches long, pointed at upper end, and nail them to the sides of the trough, leaving a space between pickets of 1½ inches for chicks or 2 inches for fowls. This gives a complete and durable feed rack, where the weak have equal chance with the strong, and no waste of feed.—Farm and Home.

No American Fat Stock Show.

There will be no American Fat Stock Show in Chicago this year. The Illinois State Board of Agriculture has decided that the time is too short to allow for proper arrangements being made. The stockmen, too, are of the opinion that it would not be convenient for them to attend, the time being too short for them to get their herds in condition. It is probable that another cause has operated to some extent. The Springfield fair involved them in debt about $15,000, and they had asked to have a guarantee fund of $20,000 raised if the fat stock show was to be held. Only $15,000 of the latter sum had been subscribed.

Dead Furrow a Nuisance.

The dead furrow is always a nuisance in preparing land for a crop, unless it is upon wet lands, which must necessarily be thrown into ridges a couple of rods wide to carry off surface water. The reversing plow is now used and highly recommended when it is desirable to have lands level. We shall investigate this reversible plow and report upon its practical utility another season.

Dairy Dots.

It is well to remember that cuts will come with the best of breeding.

If a cow has a sore teat, milk very carefully, and apply extract of witch hazel.

If a cow's teats are muddy or covered with other filth, they should be washed with water and then wiped dry before beginning to milk.

With temperature under control and churning direct at the right time, the butter will come solid so as to be easily handled and free from buttermilk.

When the butter is marbled, it is either caused by leaving too much buttermilk in the butter at the last working or the salt has not been distributed evenly.

Much of the average farm butter contains many of the essentials of good quality, but because it fails in one or more essentials it fails to bring best prices.

The laws enacted during the past two years with reference to oleomargarine seem to be slowly but surely reducing the output of the stuff, and they are certainly of great benefit to the legitimate dairy interests.

Agricultural Atoms.

Chinch bugs winter over among dead grass, in corn shocks, piles of rubbish, and along fences, especially hedges.

The potato blight is on the increase. Bordeaux mixture for blight and Paris green for bugs will have to be kept in stock by the potato grower.

For storing corn fodder, either shredded or bulk, any sort of a shed that has a rainproof roof will do. All that is necessary is that it be kept dry.

Land that is rich enough to produce crops on the "intensive" plan does not need rest, but a judicious rotation must be kept up, with clover mixed in somewhere.

Make your cellars frost proof, whitewash them, and let them at all times have light, and be capable of frequent ventilation. A cellar may be of greater value, or a nuisance.

The preponderance of evidence seems to be against the replowing of corn land for wheat. The land is in good condition without plowing. Cut the corn off low and drill in the wheat.

To tell when pumpkins are ripe chip them with the finger nail. If the nail makes a snapping noise when breaking through the rind it is ripe, but if it makes no noise or the chip comes off soft it is not ripe.

CONCEALING A SCRAWNY NECK.

MANY women decide without due investigation that they cannot wear low-necked dresses. Prominent collar bones and a "washboard" chest may be concealed by a skillful arrangement of the bodice when evening dress is required. The thing to do is to study the neck until its best points are determined, and then to so dress it that these are brought out where the defects are concealed. Sometimes the neck is pretty at the nape or along the slope to the shoulder. Then let the gown be cut square front and back, and it may be a little lower in back than in front. In front it must be only a bit lower than where ugliness begins. In front, too, the cut will narrow a little more sharply to pass over the shoulders than it does at the back. Into the edge of the gown set a band of insertion as wide as seems needed and finish the insertion by a frill of very narrow lace, tiny ribbon in beading being between it and the lace. This ribbon will draw the insertion close to the neck, and it is a wonder how delicate insertion will not seem to make the neck higher, and yet will mask the scrawniness and not hide smoothness.

Women on the Street Cars.

"Street car companies," said the new woman, "do not appreciate women. Why, do you know that women are their best patrons? They ride oftener, they ride shorter distances and they are forbearing to the last degree. A woman who has two or three blocks to travel will hail a street car. A man walks the same distance. It should not surprise me to find more than half of the nickels which find their way into the coffers of the street car companies were contributed by women. I've seen a woman spend 30 cents on street car fare going up and down the Sixth avenue shopping district. A man seldom gets into a street car unless he wishes to ride at least ten blocks. That's the reason I say that we women should have every privilege in street cars, and that we should not be driven from smoking cars because a few men wish to smoke, or passed carelessly by when we are trying to make the conductors stop the cars."

Cabinet Ladies on Wheels.

What was once a stately old colonial mansion known as the Van Ness place in Washington has been turned into a fashionable bicycle academy, and here several of the cabinet ladies have learned to ride the wheel. Velvet lawns and elaborate flower beds have long since disappeared. Mrs. Carlisle, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, has at last, after many painful efforts, vanquished the steed of steel, and Mrs. Daniel Lamont learned quite easily. She is a graceful woman and quickly learned the difficult arts of mounting and dismounting. She did not have a single fall worthy of the name. With Mrs. Carlisle it was different. Her wheel seemed to play her all manner of tricks. It ran away. In spite of careful steering it would dash into every obstacle she especially determined to avoid. Mrs. Carlisle, for some reason, does not take very kindly to it, and even now, after sevral months' instruction and practice, is afraid to go any distance alone.

Spinsters of To-day.

The spinster of the past was depicted as thin and scraggy, sour of temper and disgruntled with the world. Heaven knows she had just cause to be. She was foredoomed to live with some relative, no matter how uncongenial, because she was supposed to have perpetual need of a protector, though her age and ugliness might have been a sufficient chaperon anywhere on earth. She was expected to have no opinions or tastes, to prefer to ride backward and eat the drumsticks of the chicken and to have an insatiable passion for teaching children the catechism. That was under the happiest conditions. When the old maid was poor and dependent, then, indeed, her bread was bitter and her drink was tears. Happily, modern progress has changed this. The old maid is no longer scrawny and sour. She has discarded the meek and self-abnegating black alpaca for frills and frivols. She has a thousand interests. She teaches, she type-writes, she paints, she does a hundred things that are money-earning. She travels where she pleases and sees the sunny side of life, and the last thing she dreams of needing is the sympathy of preachers and laymen.

The Five O'clock Tea.

Oliver Wendell Holmes once described an afternoon tea as an occasion when people "giggle, gabble, gobble and git." In too many cases this is true, but it also serves to bring together pleasant people, who in this simple way grow better acquainted with one another, and get lots of good ideas that they would never obtain from the most intellectual of clubs. The very fact that people are not expected to give their views in so many set phrases, written on paper and delivered with elocutionary emphasis, often removes restraint and stiffness, and puts people in a frame of mind to utter their most brilliant and spontaneous witticisms. The fondness for the "cup that cheers, but not inebriates" is steadily increasing and the popularity of the herb is constantly pushing westward.

Cradles Out of Fashion.

The cradle, familiar through centuries, is giving way to the crib, and cribs of iron and brass are taking the place of wooden cribs. At one large furniture establishment cradles were not kept at all; it sold only cribs. At other places the sales of cribs greatly exceeded that of cradles. Of the cradles now sold only the cheapest are made to rock on rockers in the old-fashioned way, by far the greatest number swing between standards. There are now made, however, cradles that rock on platform rockers, like those of the modern platform rocking chair.

Wedding Invitations.

The latest style wedding invitation is much larger than formerly, rather longer than it is wide, on unglazed paper, in paragraph form, with everything, even the dates, written out. It is customary to make them very formal and "requests the honor of your presence" and "half after six," instead of half-past six, is the accepted fashion.

The Bride's Veil.

A square veil from the hem of the gown in front to the edge of the train in the back is considered more the thing than one with a short, removable piece to the knees in front. The opening is left on the left side and is thrown back by the maid of honor before the briday party leaves the altar. This looks very billowy and is very becoming put back so.

SWIMMING PARTIES THE LATEST SOCIETY FAD.

"Billingshurst says he has mastered his typewriter at last," said the married man. "Does he mean a machine or a girl?" asked the single man, who often tried to be funny. "The machine, of course," said the married one, wearily. "Didn't I just tell you he has mastered it?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Do Not Reach Earth.

In the Colorado desert they have rainstorms during which not a single drop of water touches the earth. The rain can be seen falling from the clouds high above the desert, but when the water reaches the strata of hot, dry air beneath the clouds it is entirely absorbed before falling half the distance to the ground. It is a singular sight to witness a heavy downpour of rain, not a drop of which touches the ground. These strange rainstorms occur in regions where the shade temperature often ranges as high as 128 degrees Fahrenheit.—Kansas City Star.

THE CLEVER WOMAN.

Two Kinds of Cleverness, but Only One That Really Pays.

"I wish I were clever."

The woman was charmingly dimpled, wore a Felix gown, was the mistress of a luxurious establishment, and was dispensing tea to afternoon callers in cups of priceless faience.

"Women who write" had been the subject on the tapis, and the remark was a delicate compliment to the woman to whom she handed the tea. She was a successful writer—successful to the extent of making a good income as the fruit of unwearied industry. She had never known the delights of diamonds or her own carriage or a box at the opera. She sometimes spent a hard earned $5 for a drive, but there was neither luxury in the carriage nor swiftness in the steeds, and she was conscious all through the drive that when she went back to the office she would write something about the country in spring or the flotsam of fall foliage and flowers with which the suburban resident could decorate his house and table.

If she took a $2 seat in the opera house, she rarely lost herself completely in the music, as she would have liked to do, because skeletons of paragraphs on theater hats and theater manners, on lovers who make love in the stalls as well as on the stage, and a thousand other things for the next day's paper flitted through her mind. She never had a Felix gown; on the contrary, she walked ten blocks and climbed seven stories to find a dressmaker who would make, though at the same time mar, her one gown for $10. Her modest house was pretty, and she was even quite famous for her petites soupers, at which one sometimes met eminent and always delightful people, but only herself and her one maid knew at what cost of perspiring brow and smutched fingers and aching back those dainty little dishes were evolved.

So there was almost reverence in her tones as she replied:

"My dear, you are the clever woman; you are far more clever than George Eliot. The really smart woman is not the one who makes her own daily bread, even though there be a Nesselrode pudding thrown in now and then. It is she who, without raising her hand, can cause all this luxury to be laid at her pretty satin shod feet. It is like eating a Delmonico dinner and lamenting that you are not the chef who cooked it. Not the woman who works, but she who gets all there is in life without working, is the really clever woman."

"May there not be two kinds of cleverness?" said the woman who came to make her adieus.—New York Herald.

MEN WITH POOR MEMORIES.

Names of Friends and Even Servants Suddenly Forgotten.

An amusing instance of aphasia was that of an old country gentleman, who retained in his employ a large number of servants, most of whom he had known since childhood.

Wishing one day to suddenly summon his butler, he found that the man's name had for the moment, as he thought, escaped him. He determined to call his footman, but to his surprise he discovered that he could no more remember the man's name than the butler's

He was all the more astonished when he found that he had entirely forgotten the names of every man and woman in his service.

He had also forgotten the names of his most intimate acquaintances, and so set about providing substitutes. Every man was known by his peculiarities; certain persons of rank in the neighborhood he called the "king" or the "queen" or the "grand vizier;" his butler and footman were respectively "old waiter" and "young waiter."

Another curious instance of aphasia was that of a famous Berlin physician. He was sitting in his study one morning, writing a receipt for a bill, when suddenly, after having written two words, he lost all sense of their meaning.

He tried to write on, but found he could think of no word. He threw down his pen in despair, and attempted to speak, but was equally unsuccessful.

This was one of those cases, however, which soon pass off, and in a short time he was able to finish the receipt.—Odds and Ends.

Japanese Singing.

Japanese music is crude. There are no written notes to go by in playing, nor has the singer any "Do, Re, Mi" to play by observation, imitation and practice. Instrumental and vocal music are always taught together, and by the same instructor, who is either a lady or a blind man, who has received a musical degree.

The singular method of practicing by a young lady intent upon cultivating her voice is thus described:

During the winter the girl in training clothes herself comfortably, takes a samisen—a banjo with a square body, played with a plectrum of ivory—and ascends every cold night the scaffold erected on the roof of the house for drying purposes.

There she sits for hours, sitting and banging away, until she can endure it no longer. Upon coming down she is so hoarse as to be unable to utter a word.

This training is persisted in until her natural voice has left her and a new clear voice has been acquired, which can be heard in a storm. The girl screams her worthless voice out and away.—Pearson's Weekly.

Too Vague on One Point.

"Your story is a little vague at one point," said the publisher, and the young woman naturally wanted to know the whereabouts of the alleged vagueness.

"Where you say," exclaimed the publisher, "that 'she, defeated in argument, had no recourse but to woman's most effective weapons against the tyrant man.' Now, do you refer there to tears or flatirons?"—Liverpool Mercury.

KONGO CANNIBALS.

DESCRIBED BY A MISSIONARY WHO KNOWS THEM WELL.

Their Appetite For Human Flesh Illustrated by Scenes That Father Allaire Has Witnessed—A Life That Is Constantly Beset With Dangers.

Father Allaire, missionary apostolic to the French Kongo, was recently in France to order a small iron steamboat to be used in visiting the mission stations, and was persuaded while there to contribute to Le Correspondant an account of his work and its field. The courageous fathers of the French Catholic missions in Africa visit regions hitherto scarcely known to white men, and, living habitually far beyond the bounds of the new African civilization, have peculiar opportunities of studying unmodified savage life. Father Allaire has been for ten years in the French Kongo, and for the last six years at Liranga.

His home station of Liranga is surrounded by cannibal tribes, and not only has he time and again declined hospitable invitations to take part in a cannibal feast, but more than once he has discerned among his neighbors a hankering after his own flesh.

"You are wrong," said a cannibal when the father turned in disgust from an offer of human flesh. "You should taste it, and after that you'd never turn away; it is so good."

A cannibal, bearing aloft a bloody human head, said to the father:

"That is the head of one you knew well. We ate him three days ago. He was delicious. You should have come earlier so as to have a taste."

Cannibalism is a veritable passion with some of the father's black neighbors. Rescued slaves tell him, and he believes it, that there are in the interior chiefs who eat no flesh save that of girls and boys from 10 to 16 years of age. He made a journey up the Kongo to the land of the fierce Bondjos, strangers to him, with the hope of buying children out of slavery and taking them back to the mission station. When he reached Ngomboc, an agglomeration of six or seven large cannibal villages, he was constantly saluted with the words:

"Sell us children. We will buy, but not sell them."

The cannibals had evidenntly heard of his mission, and the journey was in vain. When he was about to return, a chief invited him to anchor opposite a village, saying:

"Show your goods there, and my people will fetch down the slave children to sell."

The father accepted the invitation, climbed with difficulty the steep embankment, more than 30 feet high, upon which stood the fortified village, and entered the place with an interpreter and a few followers. Sixty savages surrounded the priest, and he and the chief went through the famous form of blood brotherhood, each making a slight wound in his arm and permitting the outflowing streams of blood to mingle. The father then discovered that there were no women or children in sight, and that the points of spears were trembling behind the houses. The chief suddenly demanded gifts for himself and all his men.

There was silence in the village, while the blacks babbled ceaselessly in the sun, and the lances peeped out here and there from behind the huts. The father answered that he would be glad to pay handsomely for any slaves that should be brought to the boat. At this the chief seized his left hand and bade him begone. When the father was ready to make the steep descent of the bank, he saw a stealthy giant just ready to lance one of the men from the steamboat. His left hand still grasped by the chief, the father aimed his uncharged rifle at the negro below, and the latter, dropping his weapon, drew back.

The next instant the chief had pushed the father over the bank. He lay stunned for a second, but rose unhurt to find the savage lancers attacking his own men, and the latter casting themselves into the river for safety. Quickly loading his rifle, he turned upon the attacking party, but at sight of the loaded weapon the negroes fled. Once on the boat the father found that none of his men was wounded. One, the black interpreter, was missing, and he was soon discovered making ready to storm the village. He declared that with two rifles the missionary party could sack the place, and was disgusted when the father refused to undertake the task.

"It is curious," said the interpreter, "that when these people were making ready to eat you you are unwilling to be revenged on them."

He then explained that as the missionary party clambered up to the town the negroes were vowing to have the goods as presents or by force, and that when the cannibal chief took the priest's hand the savage said significantly to his men:

"It is well; he has no skin and his hand is fat."

Father Allaire says that slavery in his part of Africa is not a thing of constant blows. Its worst feature is the possibility of human sacrifice at the death of a slave owner. The slave at ordinary times may go and come as he will, subject only to the possibility of being resold or of being called to be sacrificed in order that a dead master may have slave company in another world. Slavery is worse for children than for adults, and in parts of the French Kongo children are used as money. A pirogue is spoken of as worth so many slaves. Slave children pass through the hands of as many as 20 chiefs. A native law makes a thief caught in the act the slave of his captor, and it is not unusual for men to expose valuable things, and then lie in ambush to capture and thus enslave any one that yields to the temptation to steal the article exposed. Young children are seized and enslaved when found alone, and African mothers, who are most tender of their little ones, guard them with great care.

The common garden slug has the means of spinning a gelatinous thread by which he can let himself down from dangerous heights.

No man has come to true greatness who has not felt in some degree that his life belongs to his race. — Phillips

Judge Conklin to Remain.

After retiring from the bench, Judge A. R. Conklin expects to spend a resting vacation in San Francisco, and then return here and resume the practice of law in company with his son, N. E. Conklin. They will occupy the rooms now known as the judge's chambers, in the Galtes block. This will certainly be a strong firm, and none will have a greater circle of warm, substantial friendship.—Californian.

Randsburg Is in Kern.

County Surveyor Congdon got back from Randsburg Thursday night after having completed the survey of the new county road from Mojave, via Garlock to Randsburg. His notes settle the much discussed question of where the mining town is located. It is on section 35, township 29 south, range 40 east. This portion is in the same judicial as Mojave, but section 15 is in the first township, the same in which Kernville and Havilah are situated. This settles a question that is of great interest to the owners of school land and other claims in that vicinity. Surveyor Congdon has six letters in his pocket asking about it.—Californian.

Principal Scott of the Bishop school has not forgotten how to play foot-ball as the following from the Selma Irrigator:

"The Visalia boys were outclassed from the start, and at no time during the game had any chance of winning.

"The Selma boys rushed them from one point to another almost at will, and allowed them only one opportunity to play ball when one of the Visalians broke through Selma's line but was caught by Fred Scott before he reached goal, even though he had twenty yards the start. The V's had their blood up and managed to make the few remaining yards to the line when they kicked goal in excellent form and made their only point during the game."

The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of he Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

On Sunday, Jan. 10th, religious services will be held as follows: Preaching service in the morning at Aberdeen at 11 o'clock. At Liberty at 3 o'clock p. m., and at Independence at 7 o'clock p. m. Subject of the evening discourse, "The Syrian leper and his cure." All are cordially invited to these services.

BLUNDERS OF SPEAKERS.

A Well Known Orator Points Out Some Humorous Instances.

Mr. Joseph Malins, himself a well known public speaker, gives The Woman's Signal some amusing instances of the humors of public speaking. It is, he thinks, a lack of fluency that causes the speaker so often to blunder. Mr. Malins has listend to a temperance orator deploring the fact that a friend resorts to "the frequent use of the daily glass." He heard a notable lady speaker speak of slum children "brought into the world with no more idea of home comfort than the children of negroes in Africa."

One speaker said, "I rise emphatically," and another said, "I stand prostrate with astonishment." Yet another feelingly told his audience that it was "not the platform speaker, but the house to house visitation and the utterance of the silent word by the caller which did the most good." The statements that "the previous speaker's suggestions were very suggestive" and that another speaker's remarks were "miscalculated to mislead" Mr. Malins also mentions.

Then there is the speaker who always misplaces his "h's" and who prays "that we might be brought to the halter." There was a flight of fancy when the speaker asked, "Suppose if a modern balloon dropped upon an uninhabited island, what would the natives say?" The scientific lecturer said of his coming experiment that "all depends upon the present condition of the body about to be created." A town councilor spoke of "the rivers and streams that abut on the borough boundaries." Among Mr. Malin's other examples is the speaker who began with saying, "The proper study of mankind in general is the—the study of mankind in general," whereupon an urchin in the audience cried out, "You're a-goin in at the same hole you came out at."

No less embarrassed was the old gentleman, who, stumbling through an after dinner speech, said, "I—I have no more to say, and so—and so—I'll make a few more remarks." The builder frankly declared he was "more fitted for the scaffold than the platform." Sometimes the chairman errs in welcoming the speaker. A chairman was heard to welcome a speaker as one "who is always with us, and we wish he would come oftener." Kind was the announcement that "there will be two more opportunities to hear the lecturer once more." It was when the meeting ended that the chairman asked the audience to "close by singing just one verse of the doxology."

Bone Casings.

Mistake is made by many "home dressmakers" in putting on bone casings drawn very tightly. They should be left loose—even wrinkled—as the bones when inserted will bring them to their proper arching shape on the inside. Whalebone soaked in warm water an hour before using render them more pliable. Belt ribbon should never be sewed to the underarm seams. Bent hooks should be chosen for fastenings, setting on first a hook and then an eye, and so on alternately down the bodice, and it will never unhook of itself. Waist linings are cut an inch longer than the outside to allow for the stretching of the outside material. The extra length is taken up gradually in the seams.

Perfectly Natural.

Willie—Dobbs, in all my life I never saw a more natural expression of contempt than you have put in the face of this woman. Who was your model?

Dobbs—I used two models at the same time. One was an old maid, and the other had had three divorces. The painting, consequently, is a composite. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

What Did He Mean?

"Do you think that beautiful women are apt to be spoiled?" she murmured, with upturned eyes.

"Your beauty will never spoil you, darling," was his equivocal answer.

ITS LESSON.

From the hard times people will reap lessons of experience, learning how to act with more care in business and how to apply remedies for the stringency of such times. With more care we will have less accidents, and much less suffering if we know the true remedy. In the field and work-shop, indeed in all activities, sprains and bruises happen and bring the hard times of pain and suffering. Experience teaches that it is always best to get the best remedy, which is the cheapest in the end. Experience points to St. Jacob's Oil as without question the best remedy for such mishaps, being the surest and promptest cure. Suffering brings hard times even in prosperity. The best remedy for it is the surest way out of them.

The Clown and the Missionary.

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

[Copyright, 1892, by the Century Company.]

It was a sunny May morning, and the Baltic was steaming out of New York bay for Liverpool. It was the old ship's last trip in these waters, and she made it under special conditions. She was given up entirely to second class passengers, who, of course, as a result, had in some respects first class accommodations. The consequence was a social mixture perhaps a shade odder and more varied than is usually seen. Two weeks before my friend Miss Milman had happened to see this arrangement advertised, and we had suddenly and happily discovered that at the rates given we could afford to drop work (our painting and writing) for a month or two and together "run over to the other side."

We were on deck in that May sunshine, our hands full of flowers—for our friends had graciously ignored our lowly second class estate in their farewells—the bright waters dancing around us, the workaday world behind us, enchanted lands of romance and beauty before us, and at our elbows a new and heterogeneous representation of the dear, dull, supremely interesting human race. By the time we had spent an eternity of two days in a universe of water and sky we had discovered beneath the prevailingly commonplace exteriors various pleasing features among our fellow passengers. The Irish ward politician's obvious moral heinousness, taken together with his tender devotion to a little sick wife, gave us an enjoyable incongruity. We relished the simple and profound moral patronage we received from a trio of professional feminine philanthropists, well meaning souls, dripping with self esteem, who were going over to investigate the workings of some society for the promotion of some sort of good works. We delighted in their genuine horror of a stunning, bouncing, good looking young woman who was said to be an actress, but whose normal position, it was perfectly clear, was at the head of a column of lightly clad amazons in a Kiralfy spectacle, and we liked her as a perfect specimen of her kind, but we had most pleasure in the simple admiration and respect we felt for a shabby, gentle, intelligent missionary from China, who was on his way to a great Exeter hall meeting in London, and in the curiosity aroused in us by a dumb, wooden youth with watery, pale eyes and a red head, who looked rough and "horsy," and whom we repeatedly saw sitting in his stateroom—it was opposite ours—reading a small Bible.

We thought it piquant when we found he knew the spectacular amazon, but that was but the beginning of satisfactions, for we soon discovered that he was himself a circus clown.

To look upon a little dull, faithful looking creature like that, to see him absorbed in reading a pocket edition of the Holy Scriptures and to be able to reflect that he lived by the violent vivacities of a sawdust buffoon was a privilege that, among other things, made me laugh till I cried. Perhaps the step from the one expression to the other was shorter than usual.

The sight of him gave me new thoughts as to the possible value of rites, of formal observances. There was nothing in his aspect as he read to suggest keen intellectual or spiritual activity. On the contrary, I could imagine him turning two leaves at once and being never the wiser or the less wise. The occasion was plainly one of ceremony, but it was equally plain that it was ceremony observed with religious feeling, and without going into the gloomy question of how far religious feeling may be removed from a sense of moral obligations I felt very sure to such a boy as this, English or American, and unflattered by the public opinion of his world, the ceremony of Bible reading was morally conserving.

The third day out I did a highly reprehensible thing. I had seen the clown on deck as I came down to my stateroom, and when near the open door of his I saw the Bible lying on one of the theatrical trunks with which the place was filled. The temptation was irresistible. I took it up and opened it at the front fly leaf. Yes, there was the inscription in a half formed, schoolgirlish Italian hand. American schoolgirls wrote something like it 40 years ago:

The missionary handed them to her.

"To my beloved brother Teddy, from his loving sister Emmy. Remember thy Creator in the days of thy youth."

I called softly to Amy and held up the page.

"How could you be such a br"—brute she was going to call me, but she stopped to avail herself of my misconduct and to read the words, and then we laid the book where I had found it and slipped away.

"Yes," she said as we exchanged a look and a smile, "it would have been a pity to miss that because of any small scruples. And now you'd better stop. A little circus clown traveling over the earth like that is too picturesque an object for investigation. He'll never come up to the situation."

I thought she was probably right. Still my curiosity was not slaked.

During the several years spent by myself "on the stage" I had occasionally come in touch with circus people. To some extent they recruit the stage, and though actors affect a great superiority there is a degree of common understanding and on occasion of good fellowship between all show folks. I consider myself to hold rather originally favorable opinions of the sawdust performers as compared to other nomads, but I am not accustomed to see religion flourish among any such class, except semiocasionally in the case of Roman Catholics. One effect of Puritanism on Protestantism has been to unfit it for many Christlike ministration which the old church still better or worse performs. It was the loneliness of the little clown's religious aspirations that touched me most. I reflected on how many good people would be disconcerted to hear of them, on how many would feel that in some mysterious way such aspirations most irritatingly and unjustly weakened their own position of condemnation toward clowns and circuses in particular and the world, the flesh and the devil at large.

I smiled at the thought. I was lying on deck in my steamer chair, and just then the captain of the amazons, in much nautical splendor of blue serge and white anchors, whirled down the deck and collided in front of me with the shabby missionary.

The girl turned pale. It was pleasing to see the awe with which the cloth inspired her. In the confusion of her apologies she dropped a pack of cards. The missionary picked them up, and with a kindly, faintly humorous smile handed them to her, and she got herself off expeditiously, though, so to speak, with much sail taken in.

It occurred to me that perhaps this preacher did not illustrate the points I had been making against the pious. We had arrived at a bowing acquaintance, the missionary and I, and now when he glanced my way I smiled my recognition of the moment's accident. He smiled, too, and said, "When I first went to China, I found that for the work I wanted to do I must dress like a Chinaman." The conclusion of his thought—that the clerical broadcloth might still interfere with his usefulness—he expressed only by a quizzical glance down the deck toward the young lady whose normal costume was tights.

Later in the long, fair, ocean girt day as the ship glided on between two still, blue wonder worlds—the water was like satin—Amy brought her water color box on deck and began to sketch.

Everybody was on deck. The clown, with a white bell shaped soft hat pulled down to his ears and his hands in his pockets, was doggedly taking a constitutional and chewing a toothpick.

I was planning to use my past connection with the stage to help me to his acquaintance when it appeared that we were to win that privilege through a quite different appeal. As I lay, drowsy with content, watching the dashes of color brighten Amy's pad, I became aware that Teddy Catty—that was his delightful name—was circling about us, his pale, white lashed little eyes blinking fixedly—if you will permit the paradox—upon Amy's work.

I looked up at him amicably as he came nearer. He touched his hat. There was a touch of the grotesque, something clownish, in his very organization, and the way he touched his hat was faintly funny, was dimly Audreylike. He came nearer shyly, cleared his throat and said, with a very good accent and in quite the usual English way:

"Beg pardon. I hope you'll excuse me for watching, but I take such an interest when I see any one painting."

"Do you paint?" I concluded my reply.

"Oh, no, no, no, indeed, but I have a sister who does. She paints wonderfully." Then, lowering his voice, he added hesitatingly, as if it were really immodest to speak of so much glory, "She has a picture in the Royal academy this year."

Now, this was exactly what I wanted to hear about. Amy was painting away. She had recognized the clown's presence by a civil glance only, so I encouraged him to draw up a stool and wait till her sketch was done.

I soon learned much of the little all that my week's acquaintance with him disclosed. The sight of a girl painting had melted him into a mood as communicative as a child's, and he only wanted a sympathetic audience to enjoy with him the music of Emmy's name. Yes, the heroine of the Royal academy and the dear giver of the little Bible were one—she was Teddy Catty's only sister.

Let me give such an outline of their history as I can in orderly sequence.

The Nose.

The nose is intended for breathing, the mouth for speaking and eating. Who has ever seen a horse breathing otherwise than through his nostrils? Minute scientific investigation has revealed the fact that the number of people who breathe through their nostrils are becoming gradually but surely fewer in number. The consequence is that the nostrils decrease in size, while it has been found that the prevailing nose is quite an inferior organ to that of our forefathers.

Doctors at the present time are frequently asked to operate on noses and to enlarge them. Their owners have found that they do not fulfill their functions as well as they used to. It is beginning to be feared by scientific people that if matters grow much worse we shall lose the use of our nasal organs entirely.

It is a well known physiological fact that unused muscles and bones gradually disappear. Fish who live in the dark, for instance, or the mole, who resides underground, become blind. Thus, if we cease to use our noses for breathing, they will cease to exist. They will become superfluous!—Pearson's Weekly.

Ruskin's Strange Recovery.

News has come in a private letter from an artist that John Ruskin, the greatest English art critic, is recovering. He has been mentally deranged for a long period, and at one time his death was expected momentarily. Ruskin began to fail not long after the romantic transfer of his wife to Sir John Millais, and his recovery dates from the week in which Millais died.

OUT WITH OLD NOSTRUMS.

Try Paine's Celery Compound, the Most Advanced Remedy That Science Can Give.

MRS. R. R. PRATT.

There are very intelligent men and women who still prefer open fires to steam pipes and furnaces.

But only a very shallow-minded person would deliberately choose an old-fashioned remedy in case of sickness.

Sufferers from neuralgia, rheumatism or kidney trouble want the surest and most advanced remedy science can give them. Getting well is not a matter of sentiment, but the most seriously practical matter. That is why the most thoughtful and conservative people now use Paine's celery compound, and recommend it to friends and relatives who are threatened or afflicted with nervous exhaustion, sleeplessness, disordered liver or blood diseases.

That wonderfully acute and patient investigator, Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth college, embodied in Paine's celery compound the most progressive, yet thoroughly established, views on the cure of diseases of nervous origin.

All of the imitators of Paine's celery compound—every one knows how many there are—have proved to be entirely wide of the mark. Their promises of astonishing curative abilities are easily made on paper; but they are not kept.

It is easy to verify every claim made by Paine's celery compound. There is no village so small but it contains families in which this wonderful remedy has made some member well. Men who weigh their words and are careful what they write above their signatures have publicly given this great invigorator its deserved credit for health-making powers such as no other remedy ever received.

MRS. W. R. JOHNSON.

That Paine's celery compound certainly cures such diseases as neuralgia, sleeplessness and dyspepsia does not admit of a doubt. It builds up the entire nervous system, plumps out the tissues, starts the blood into healthy circulation and regulates the action of the nerves. It makes people well, strong and energetic.

Mrs. R. R. Pratt of Centre Brook, Conn., whose portrait is given here, says plainly:

"I find Paine's celery compound a perfect medicine. I took several bottles for general debility, and it did for me all I could ask. It made me well. I have recommended it to my friends, and they all speak in its praise."

Paine's celery compound is the most assured and direct means of getting back a full store of vitality. It is a true nerve regulator. It exterminates all vicious humors that linger in the blood. It cures rheumatism, and is used by physicians as a specific for this disease.

Says Mrs. W. R. Johnson of Cape Rozier, Me:

"I was attacked with rheumatic fever in its worst form. I employed the best physicians, but received no permanent relief. When I commenced to take Paine's celery compound my feet and hands were swollen so badly that they were useless. I could not walk a step and was suffering very much. When I had taken four bottles of Paine's celery compound I could walk well, and I continued until I took six bottles. It made me perfectly well, and I have been so ever since. I wish the whole world might know of its great value."

Paine's celery compound makes people well!

Winter searches out the weak parts in the body; colds settle in the deranged organs and develop disease. Make every part of the body sound; build up the strength and be ready for the shock of cold weather by taking Paine's celery compound

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A LONG SEARCH.

Everywhere Kitty had sought the quotation—
Browning and Tennyson, Shelley and Lang.
Shakespeare she handled with great veneration,
Shutting, however, the tomes with a bang.

Byron she searched, and Swinburne so burning—
Gosse, Austin Dobson, Stevenson, Moore.
Leaves of each one she was futilely turning,
Hopeless her search as ever before.

Then wearied, tearful, she angrily flirted
Out of the library—rushed she distraught.
"Let's give it up," then she poutingly blurted,
"For I have forgotten the line that we sought."

A SHOWER IN THE VILLAGE.

This Word Picture Somehow Awakens Pleasant Memories.

Over the whole village that stillness reigns which only a Sunday in summer can produce. It is nearing the noon hour, and there is a glare of sunlight everywhere.

The quiet of the streets seems to be intensified as one approaches the corner where the small stone church stands alone. There is a service going on inside, and the rolling music of the organ faintly wafted from within reaches the deserted streets outside. Rows of houses with closed blinds and unoccupied doorsteps meet the eye on every side, and down a narrow lane near at hand a freshly painted barn gleams hotly in the fierce sunshine. Three or four pigeons have fluttered to the roof and are sunning themselves and softly cooing.

Near the door of the church a horse and buggy stand, and now and again the animal, bothered by flies, stamps and splashes in the shallow puddle under him.

A dog trots lazily up the street and stops on his way to chase and bark at a few belated sparrows. One of the pigeons stalks with dignity across the roof, and another flutters into the air with a whirring sound and disappears.

The sound of the organ has died quite away and only the distant clucking of a disturbed hen breaks the quiet. The sunlight seems to have taken on a darker shade.

A sharp gust of wind sweeps up and down the street and rushes through the foliage of the sleeping trees. The sparrows that occupied the street are not in sight. No living thing is to be seen, and the newly painted barn, that a moment ago looked scorched and blistered, seems to have taken on a cooler tinge. The breeze has died quite away, and there is a moment of supreme stillness.

Then a dull, sullen sound that seems like the roar of a distant train steals upon the air. It comes again, and there is no mistaking it—it is thunder. A flurried hen runs across the lane and disappears behind a board just as three large drops mark the dust covered sidewalk. Drops are falling everywhere, and as they increase in number they decrease in size. There is a gentle patter on the sidewalk, on the house tops, through the trees, which becomes more and more hurried until it generates into a steady rush of falling rain. The landscape is almost shut out from sight.

Slowly and by hardly perceptible degrees the steady rush becomes a patter, and the sun, with sudden brilliance, changes each drop to a glistening diamond.

The rain ceases, and the sparkling trees gently shake themselves in the sunlight.

THE SONG OF PAN.

Mad with love, and laden
With immortal pain,
Pan pursued a maiden—
Pan, the god, in vain.

For when Pan had nearly Touched her, wild to plead,
She was gone—and clearly
In her place a reed!

Long the god, unwitting,
Through the valley strayed,
Then at last, submitting,
Cut the reed, and made,

Deftly fashioned, seven
Pipes, and poured his pain
Unto earth and heaven
In a piercing strain.

So with god and poet:
Beauty lures them on,
Flies, and ere they know it
Like a wraith is gone.

Then they seek to borrow Pleasure still from wrong,
And with smiling sorrow
Turn it to a song.

—Archibald Lampman.

AN AWKWARD SITUATION.

Ambition to get leading parts induced me to throw up a good position in the north of England to join a manager starting at Salisbury. The business turned out disastrous, the theater closing in a fortnight. I, an utter stranger in the place, with a wife and babe, was taken ill, and could hardly stir for days. But for a good-hearted landlady I do not know what would have become of us.

One morning, however, over a melancholy pipe in the grassy hollow below Old Sarum, a ray of hope dawned upon me. In my anxiety and depression one old acquaintance had altogether slipped my memory. This was a Mr. Atherstone, an art dealer of Bond street. He first knew me when I had become assistant to a well-known engraver and watched my progress with great interest. I wrote, telling him the whole story of my misfortune. A prompt reply followed.

Apart from proof of Mr. Atherstone's good feeling toward me his letter contained news that I read with surprise and pleasure—not without reason, as the following extract will show:

"I want you to undertake a commission that requires tact and discrimination. It is a private inquiry, and has to be carried through at Shrewton court, Merivale, the seat of Lord Mountfalcon, within a few miles of Salisbury. Obtain permission from the owner to see his art treasures. I shall forward to you a jeweled miniature of Lord Mountfalcon, and want you to ascertain if it is a fac simile of one in the collection. That is the least important point of the inquiry with which I intrust you. Find out, at any trouble and with all the skill you can command, the circumstances under which the fac simile came to be painted. There is a keeper of the galleries; try to make friends with him. Keep the object of your visit as dark as possible."

On again hearing from the art dealer I wrote to Lord Mountfalcon, asking permission to visit his picture galleries. By next post I had the most courteous of replies, acceding to my request. One thing puzzled me, the handwriting of the note signed by the nobleman was familiar. Where I had before seen it I could not recollect. Next morning I went over to Merivale. Shrewton court, situated in a spacious park, commands many picturesque objects. One is a graceful Ionic temple, half hidden in a mass of firs and white elms. So much did it strike my fancy that I left the pathway to obtain a close view. It was prevented, however, by a singular incident. As I approached a young girl in white bounded down the marble steps. Her melancholy, yet beautiful, face, and sunny tresses decked with pansies and lilies, might have been Ophelia's. To my perplexity, she advanced and courtesied three times. Directly afterward a matronly woman ran out of the building. She quickly took the girl by the hand and led her away.

The Shrewton collection would be famous if only for its Florentine and Venetian masterpieces. While absorbed before them, a light foot fall behind aroused me. I turned and saw Lord Mountfalcon. His open, handsome face would have been an excellent letter of introduction anywhere. He said:

"I have seen you before; was it not as Charles Surface at Exeter?"

From theatricals Lord Mountfalcon's talk glided into matters of pictorial art, in which he was evidently an enthusiast. Half an hour passed, and his lordship remarked:

"I must now leave you. On no account miss the small blue galleries. There is a portfolio of Rembrandt etchings that must have special value in the eyes of a practical draughtsman. Perhaps you might also like to look at my bronzes, cameos and miniatures?"

"I should, my lord," I answered, "very much. Are there many?"

"Yes, a large number," replied his lordship, "very representative, from Hilliard and Cooper to Ross and Moule. My portrait by Moule I regard as fine as anything painted by Cosway. The keeper shall now attend to you. He will have orders to let you see anything in which you may have an interest."

When the keeper entered the mystery vanished about the handwriting sent to me the day before.

I had known Samuel Crackenthorpe, and we were no longer on speaking terms. We had become intimate at Exeter, where he was then a lawyer's clerk and a small money lender. It was not long before I found out he was a mean, wily, intriguing, treacherous fellow, and on discovering him guilty of gross dishonesty I angrily cut his acquaintance. We met, of course, like perfect strangers, but Crackenthorpe's manner was polite, even to obsequiousness.

I had looked at water colors, bronzes and prints and now asked for the miniatures. They were contained in three large cases, placed upon the table in the smaller chamber of the blue gallery, and unlocked at my request. Just as I was preparing to examine the works of art a footman entered and informed me it was his master's wish I should take luncheon. I could either sit down with Mr. Crackenthorpe or be attended separately. But I excused myself on the score of wanting to leave almost immediately, intending to resume my visit next day. Left alone, I examined several of the miniatures. At last I unhooked the Mountfalcon picture. It represented the nobleman in court dress. I satisfied myself on every point. After the closest scrutiny I was convinced the miniature I carried in my breast pocket differed in nothing from the original. It was perfect in similarity of jewels, arms and setting. It struck me that I would compare the pictures.

The light being less strong in the northern than southern division of the gallery, I entered the brighter chamber. There I looked at the miniatures side by side. I was aghast for a moment lest they should become displaced. To tell which from which would have been impossible. Putting the copy in my pocket, I returned, placing the original on a small table near the cases. Some feeling impelled me to again visit the south apartment, where I once more examined every point in the picture Mr. Atherstone had sent. My all-absorbing thought was to get a clew to the history of that picture. My meditation was broken by a faint sigh-like sound from the inner apartment. I looked around; it was perfectly solitary and silent. But on returning to replace Lord Mountfalcon's miniature, it had disappeared.

My feelings can be conceived. I searched in vain. Everything else had been untouched. Amid bewilderment a terrible idea occurred to me. I knew Crackenthorpe's malevolent nature. Had he, I thought, found an opportunity to pay off his grudge against me? It was time, however, to meet the difficulty. Stating what had happened, I requested Crackenthorpe to at once summon his master, if at hand.

Lord Mountfalcon listened to my statement with the greatest calmness and patience. In reply, he said most likely I must have inadvertently dropped the picture among the prints or other things on the table. The keeper and a footman were then ordered to make a search through everything. It was perfectly fruitless. The nobleman, whose eyes had never left me, said:

"What explanation have you? I learn that you have been alone with the works of art more than half an hour, and during the time no one has been near the gallery."

"It is a matter of opinion, my lord," I returned, looking hard at the keeper; "a noise I heard warrants my belief that someone secretly did enter."

"Do you want to throw suspicion on me?" exclaimed Crackenthorpe. "It would not be the first time you have falsely charged me with dishonesty."

The nobleman waved his hand and said to me:

"It is very painful to me, but I have no alternative. You must be searched."

"Forbear, my lord," I calmly replied; "spare me such humiliation."

"Hear me for a moment only," cried the keeper. "I assure you he is a man of disreputable character," and, creeping closer to me, Crackenthorpe struck my breast pocket and hissed out, "What have you there?"

I knew full well, heaven knows, but what could I do?

"I have no property of Lord Mountfalcon's," I said, "and Mr. Crackenthorpe knows that perfectly well."

"Disprove his charge, then, by producing what your pocket contains," was the answer. "I can have no more delay. If you again refuse what is demanded one of my servants must ride off to Salisbury for a constable."

Surveying the whole situation, I answered:

"Allow me a private interview, Lord Mountfalcon, and I can give you such an explanation that must remove all suspicion."

What the nobleman's answer might have been I know not. At the moment a wild, mocking cry came from the garden.

"What is that?" exclaimed Lord Mountfalcon, anxiously; "surely I know the sound."

In an instant he had quitted the gallery. Soon confused voices, intermingled with the angry tones of the master of the mansion, arose in the corridor. Something unusual had taken place. In a few minutes Lord Mountfalcon, strangely pale, re-entered and laid the missing miniature on the table. He said to me, with extended hand:

"I deeply regret we have caused you so much anxiety. Hear my explanation. A niece of mine, unfortunately of weak intellect, gained admission in some inexplicable manner to the gallery. The noise you heard doubtless came from her entrance or departure. A gardener observed her unattended, and, following the young lady, saw her cast something into the rosary. It was the portrait taken from the table where you had deposited it. I deeply regret you should have been placed in such an awkward situation."

I bowed and prepared to depart. Lord Mountfalcon would not hear of it, stating he wished to see me in private.

"By the way," he added to Crackenthorpe, "it is a mystery to me how Lady Hester could have obtained entrance here. By means of that locked door she is entirely cut off from this side of the mansion. Has the door been unlocked since my orders?"

"I have no knowledge of it," faltered the keeper, turning pale.

Lord Mountfalcon crossed to the door, and it opened on the handle being turned. What transpired I did not learn until an hour later.

As I sat down over my luncheon I began to see my way to the possibility of obtaining a clew to the history of the miniature in my pocket. Atherstone had given me some facts, but I had been sensitive about disclosing them. It was not long before I was closeted with the owner of Shrewton court. In a lull of conversation his lordship observed in a quiet tone:

"Was it solely an interest in art bringing you to Merivale?"

I answered in the negative.

"I thought so," was the reply. "Now we have established friendly relations, may I ask why you at first so firmly resisted my demand of your being searched?"

"Because, my lord," I answered, "I have such a terrible witness of guilt in my pocket."

"What was it?" observed the nobleman.

"Only this," I replied, handing over the replica.

Silence in the room was only broken by the faint ticking of a small French clock. "I am astounded," cried the nobleman. "Surely this is my miniature. Yet, no! My own was slightly stained by the wet grass of the rosary. To whom does it belong?"

"I am ignorant," was my answer. "It has been in the hands of a dealer for sale, and one of his clients is eager to ascertain how it came to be painted."

"Who is that?"

"I have no knowledge," I replied.

"Well," observed the nobleman, "I would pay a handsome reward to find out the history of the thing. Have you any key to unlock the mystery?"

"No," I said, "but most likely Crackenthorpe has. May I put him through a cross-examination in your presence?"

"By all means," returned Lord Mountfalcon; "it may prevent his being lodged in jail. That unlocked door in the blue gallery has revealed what a grossly dishonest fellow he is. Ask him what you please."

Sam Crackenthorpe, fearful of being prosecuted by his master, answered every question I put. The examination, as near as I recollect, was as follows:

"Well, Mr. Crackenthorpe, you know this fac simile of the miniature you asserted I had in my pocket?"

"Yes."

"Who painted it?"

"Mr. Moule."

"Where?"

"In my sitting room."

"Who obtained his services?"

"I did."

"At whose request?"

"A lady came to see the galleries after Lord Mountfalcon went off to the Mediterranean."

"Her name?"

"Miss Wincaunton."

"Where did she see the original miniature?"

"At Moslem, the jeweler's, in Picadilly."

"What story was told the miniature painter to blind him?"

"That his lordship's sister secretly wanted a copy."

"How came Miss Wincaunton to wish for a copy?"

"Because she so admired the likeness."

Three months afterward Mr. Atherstone and I witnessed the ceremony of the marriage at St. George's, Hanover square, between Lord Mountfalcon and the beautiful Lady Susan Brewster. A rival, Miss Wincaunton, had insinuated the nobleman was in love with her, producing as proof the miniature she had obtained under such mean and crafty circumstances. Lady Brewster returned Lord Mountfalcon's picture in a fit of anger, believing the falsehood, and broke off the engagement. On Mr. Atherstone communicating the facts of the case Lady Susan became reconciled to her old lover.

After the ceremonial was over Mr. Atherstone took me out for luncheon. Later on, dallying with a cigar and a bottle of claret, the art dealer said:

"I think we are in duty bound to drink the health of the bride and bridegroom."

"By the bye," continued my old friend, "I shall run down the week after next to Shrewton court, for Lord Mountfalcon told me he had fitted you up capital quarters as the new keeper of his art galleries."—Lloyd's London Weekly.

We Can't Do a Thing to Her.

To one who has visited a telephone exchange and noticed how central works, it is amusing to watch the behavior of the man who cannot get recognition. In nine cases out of ten, if the hour is late and central is sleepy, he goes through this performance:

He turns the handle sharply, jabs the receiver at his ear, and shouts "Hello!" through the transmitter. After waiting a moment or so, he repeats the action. Still no answer. Then, unless he is a church member, he uses language that he would not wish his wife to hear, and twists the handle of the calling bell until his wrist aches.

It does not disturb central. No bells ring in the telephone exchange. When the subscriber rings a lozenge-shaped disk drops, and the number of the calling 'phone is exposed. That is all. It remains exposed until central answers the call and puts the disk back. If central's head is turned the other way, all the ringing in the world won't attract her attention. When she looks around she'll see the exposed number and answer the call. If she never looks around she'll never learn of the call.—New York Times.

The ancient copper mines of Sinai have just been re-explored. These were worked by the Egyptians, or their slaves, 7,000 years ago, and are believed to have been abandoned about 3,000 years ago.

One successful venture which has come of the Manchester ship canal is the steamship service between the cotton metropolis and London. It is a long way round, but the saving in freight dues is enormous.

One of the features of California life which is not often noticed in print is the large decrease of the Chinese laboring population of the State. San Francisco's Chinatown has fallen off almost one-half during the last three years.

Mathematical calculations show that an iron ship weighs 27 per cent less than a wooden one, and will carry 115 tons of cargo for every 100 tons carried by a wooden ship of the same dimensions, and both loaded to the same draft of water.

Newest of London's periodicals is the Automotor and Horseless Vehicle Journal, a 6-penny monthly paper, which, in its own words, "anticipates the field which will doubtless soon exist for its operations." Its originators are convinced that in the near future the autocar industry must become an important one in England and other countries.

The marriage rate in Scotland is 66.92 in every 10,000 of the population. To every 100 marriages 456 children are born, as against 418 in England. Of a total of 27,604 marriages which took place during the year 1,166 were irregular, having been performed without proclamation of purpose and without reference to the intervention of religious ceremony.

Italy is about to publish at the government expense a photographic reproduction of the manuscript of Justinian's "Pandects," now preserved in the Florence library. The Florence manuscript is the oldest and most correct we have of the great code of Roman law. It is of the sixth or seventh century, at least, and may perhaps have been written as early as Justinian's own time.

Twenty-three colleges in the United States were founded before the beginning of this century. Among the leading ones are: Harvard, 1636; William and Mary, 1693; Yale, 1701; University of Pennsylvania, 1740; Princeton, 1746; Washington and Lee, 1749; Columbia, 1754; Brown, 1764; Rutgers, 1766; Dartmouth, 1769; Hampden-Sidney, 1775; Washington (Md.), 1782, and Dickinson, 1785.

At the "Theater Salon," the first of the single-performance entertainments to open this season in Paris, the show consisted of the recitation of new ballads of low life, with living pictures as illustrations. All the songs were indecently ambiguous, while the pictures were not ambiguous at all, providing the exhibition of woman's underwear now common to the variety stage. The show was presented as a parlor entertainment.

A learned scientist has recently been investigating the effect of food, particularly vegetables, on the human character. He finds that a diet of carrots ameliorates harshness of character and reduces nervous irritability; peas create fatty tissue and encourage joyousness; white turnips have a depressing influence. Cabbage is good for pulmonary complaints, while lettuce acts as a sedative upon the human frame, owing to the opium contained in its milky juice.

At Trieste three experienced divers are just now engaged upon a highly interesting task. In 1811, a terrible explosion took place in the harbor there, the causes of which have never been explained. Much loss of life and property was caused, and the Danae, a French frigate, was sunk. The divers soon ascertained the position of the hull, but all efforts to raise it have been in vain. The vessel contained $600,000 in gold and the valuable jewels of a French princess.

England's royal marine corps is to be increased by 8,000 men, who are to be substituted for the army contingents that form the garrisons of British strongholds out of Europe, such as Halifax, Hong Kong, Bermuda, St. Helena and Aden. The idea seems to have sprung from the recent growth of the French infanterie de marine and colonial army. The result of the change would be to put the military control of these places entirely in the hands of the navy department.

Considerable apprehension has been excited among Bostonians of a certain sort by the persistence of rumors about a plan for confining the city's liquor saloons to a prescribed territory outside of the residential districts. Nobody seems to know just how or why or by whom this scheme is to be carried out, but as Boston has few or no districts in which very considerable numbers of people do not live, those for whom a convenient saloon is regarded as a necessary condition of existence, show an angry irritation that such a project should have advanced far enough even to have become a topic of conversation.

The Biggest Pension.

The biggest annual pension that is paid in any part of the world is $95,000. The Duke of Richmond is the recipient, and he has never moved a finger or a leg to acquire this vast annuity, which is perpetual, passing from son to son, for no other reason than that the first Duke of Portland had a pull with Charles II.

According to the Army and Navy Journal, in 1676 Charles II. granted to the Duke of Portland a pension of £19,000 a year, in perpetuity, in lieu of a duty of 1 shilling a caldron on all coals exported from the Tyne. Up to 1799 the family had received as proceeds of the duty upward of £2,000,000 sterling, and in July, 1799, the duty was commuted for an annual payment in perpetuity of £19,000 a year from the Consolidated Fund. As security for its payment consols to the value of £633,333 6s. 9d. were purchased. In the following year £485,434 4s. 7d. worth of these consols were sold, and the proceeds invested in land, and during the present reign the remainder of the consols were sold and the proceeds similarly invested.

Taking the annual payment on account of pensions at the present time, Earl Nelson is in receipt of the highest outside the royal annuities, viz., £5,000 per annum, payable in perpetuity to all and every one of the heirs male to whom the title of Earl of Nelson shall descend.

The Duke of Wellington's annual pension of £4,000 is for life, and Lord Rodney's pension of £2,000 is, like that of Earl Nelson, perpetual. The amount of royal annuities, excluding the Queen's grant of £385,000, is £173,000, and, counting the pensions for naval and military services, £27,700; political and civil, £13,086; judicial, £70,705, besides a large number of miscellaneous pensions; the total comes to £316,758 yearly. The largest pension on retiring from office is the £5,000 a year given to retiring Lord Chancellors.

Mongolian Pheasants Cunning.

The number of pheasants coming to market led a young man to suppose that it would be the easiest thing in the world to go out in the country and shoot all he wanted. He is a good shot, but had no hunting dog. He took the train to Forest Grove, and was delighted and surprised to see pheasants sitting on the fences in many places as the train rushed along. He thought all he had to do was to walk back along the line and just shoot the birds right and left. When he walked along the line the birds, which had paid no attention to the train, noticed him a half mile away and quickly disappeared, and tramp where he would not a feather could he raise. He finally came to a large field of corn, and noticed a number of pheasants on the fence at the far corner. He thought to steal around through the corn and get a shot at these birds, but when he got round to where he thought to see them there were no birds there. He skulked around through that corn field, crawling between the rows and peering in every direction, but although he knew there was quite a number of birds in among the corn not one could he see, and he came home without any. He says the Mongolian pheasant is the shyest, slyest, cunningest bird that walks the face of the earth, and when he goes hunting them again he will have a good dog.—Portland Oregonian.

John P. Hale in Public Life.

During his sixteen years of service in the Senate he was known to the whole country for his knightly courage in facing the embattled hosts of slavery. He was equally well known by his sallies of ready wit and his abounding good nature, without which he would not have been able to stand in his place as the representative of a hated cause. They softened the asperities of debate, and perhaps averted personal assaults. He kept down the ire of his enemies by compelling them to laugh at the moral grotesqueness of the attitude in which he placed them. He was anything but a fanatic on the slavery question; he never gave countenance to any scheme of disunion or any form of revolutionary action. His whole public life was guided by his strong common sense. He had no desire to be singular. He loved the approbation of his fellows, and would have lived in peace with all men. But he had convictions and followed them, and for the sake of those convictions he would have been ready to lay down his life.—Century.

A Depleted Stock.

Cora—It's perfectly lovely. But what do they have all these policemen at the game for? Oh, I know; it is to keep the men from stealing bases.—Somerville Journal.

The Reason.

"Why, you little fool, so that the artist may know when to stop painting, of course."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Barn for Dairy Purposes.

A common barn can be easily and cheaply changed into a dairy barn of large capacity, by employing such a plan as that shown in the first illustration. Two wings, with "shed" roofs, are extended out at right angles from each side of the old barn at one end.

ENLARGED BARNS.

The interior arrangement is shown in the floor plan. A feed car, with a track, is arranged for the feed floor and the feeding alley in front of the cows.

A double silo, grain room and calf pens, with lofts over them, occupy one side of the barn proper, while calf pens and a hay bay occupy the other side. Thus the main barn is used mainly for the storing of feed, while the addition is given up to the stalls. The expense of such a plan will be very much less than would be entailed by the building of a new barn, or even a lengthening of the old one, while the plan shown herewith gives a much more convenient arrangement than could otherwise be had.

Why Fruit Trees Die.

Why so many nursery grown trees die when transplanted is tersely and truthfuly stated in Bulletin No. 20, of the Oklahoma Experiment Station. It says: Among the causes of failure have been the following: Failure to prepare the land before trees arrive; hurried and imperfect planting; high heads, exposing the body of the tree to sunscald and attacks of borers. Planters are urged to set strong, healthy trees, in well prepared soil, plowed deep and sub-soiled, first pruning the roots to one or two inches in length, which will cause them to strike down deep into the soil. Start the head fifteen to eighteen inches from the ground and lean the tree to the southwest. Then the top will shade the trunk, prevent sunscald and attacks of borers. Give frequent and shallow cultivation to keep in the moisture which the deeply subsoiled land has caught during winter and spring. Grow only hoed crops, if any, in a young orchard, and none at all in an old one, except peas or clover to be cut and left to decay on the land.

Sheep Per Acre.

It is frequently asked how many sheep can be kept on an acre of land. Prof. Shaw tells us that on the experimental farm last year they kept six ewes and ten lambs on one acre of land for five and a half months. This, however, we think would be too high an estimate for the ordinary acres and ordinary management. The best way to estimate any kind of herbivorous or grass-eating stock is by the pound rather than by the head. There will not be a very great difference between the amount of grass consumed by a thousand pounds of beef, horse, or sheep. With hogs it is different because they are not usually dependent on grass for their feed, and hence a greatly increased number of pounds can be kept per acre when hogs are fed a grain ration. We are, of course, speaking of stock animals and not of cattle that are kept on full feed, corn, and other grain, and allowed all the grass they will eat.—Exchange.

Nature of Sandy Soil.

Sand has a great power for the transportation of water. It will convey water quicker than any other soil, but it will not hold as much. A clay soil hold more, but water will pass through more slowly. Sandy soils take in all the rains that fall, and if there is a subterranean supply within ten or fifteen feet of the surface, it seems to have a power to pump the water up to the roots of the plants. If, however, there is no such supply, the higher temperature of summer will usually increase the temperature of the top sandy soil and gradually dry it out faster than a fine, clayey soil. Clay will hold more moisture, and hold it longer than any other form of soil, but it must be protected by surface cultivation.

Wheat Will Fatten Hens.

While it is true that wheat is a better feed than corn for egg production, some caution needs to be used in feeding it too liberally. Hens are more greedy for wheat than for any other grain, probably because instinct teaches them that this grain contains just what they need for every purpose. But it is a mistake to suppose that wheat with the phosphate of lime it contains does not also furnish the fat-forming nutrition that needs to be given to fowls in moderation. Hence there ought to be light rations of wheat, with some chopped clover hay and vegetables like cabbage or turnip, to give variety and fill the gizzard without furnishing too much nutrition.

Hints from Horsemen.

There is undoubtedly a scarcity of first-class horses in the leading horse markets, and a surplus of inferior ones.

There is nothing so good for bedding as good, long rye straw, and it has the preference over anything else, peat moss included.

The colt should be educated from the start not to be afraid of anything, and should be handled and driven when not over one year old, just enough to teach it what it means to be hitched and driven about the road and the city.

Never strike or in any other way abuse or frighten a colt as it is impossible for him to understand why you are doing it, and it will only make him wild, timid, or vicious, and cannot possibly do any good, and is bound to do harm. Use patience and kindness, and you will be sure to conquer in the end.

An old broncho driver gives the following as a sure way to cure a horse of kicking: "The way we fix a kicking horse is to tie one of his forelegs with a rope to the hind leg on the other side. Then, as soon as he starts to kick, he jerks his front leg off the ground, and goes down in a heap. Two or three doses of that kind will cure the worst case you can find."

Horticulture.

Burn all the wood cut out of black and raspberries, so as to destroy the eggs of insects.

Keep it in mind, that like begets like, as much so among plants as it does among animals.

There is no advantage in mulching strawberry plants or fruit trees until the ground freezes.

Bank up young apple trees to the height of fifteen inches; it will have a great tendency to keep the mice and rabbits from girdling them.

With a growing young orchard the farm will augment in value in your own eyes as well as in those of your neighbor, and you will be very independent in naming a figure.

Too little attention is paid to the quince as a market fruit. What few growers there are in the country find the business a very paying one, and there is room for more without crowding the market.

Dogwood.

The West Indies are very rich in forest trees. Many of these are turned to singular uses. The bark of the prune tree is used in the making of a liquor suggestive of cherry brandy; the wood of the ironwood, which sinks in water, is turned into massive mallets for the heavy work of the carpenter; the rubber tree is tapped by the negro boys, and its oozing juice is made into balls for their games, or, if near the seaside, for dressing the oakum with which the cracks in the fishing canoes are calked. The calabash bears a fruit, the skin of which, when dried, gives the natives drinking vessels and water bottles; the fustic gives a beautiful yellow dye, and the logwood dyes a rich purple, and is much used in the manufacture of crusty old port. The West Indian negro is a born poacher. He catches the quail by the cruel expedient of strewing finely powdered cayenne or bird pepper in the little dust pits where the birds "wash." The burning powder gets into the eyes of the bird, which, confused and helpless, is then easily caught. When he wants a wholesale supply of fish, he explodes a piece of dynamite, which was probably intended for the making of new Government roads, over a hole in a mountain stream, and the fish are killed by the concussion. But his favorite resource is the bark of the dogwood, one of the most plentiful of the forest trees. This he drops into a river hole, and the mullet, intoxicated, come to the surface of the water. This singular property of the dogwood has been made the subject of recent experimentation, and it is now found that the sap of the tree specially prepared gives a solution which acts as a powerful local anaesthetic, and it is expected that the new extract will be of great service in dentistry.

Before the invention of the barometer and the thermometer, which are the basis of meteorology, there could be no question of water predictions; prophetic almanacs existed none the less, but their authors confined themselves to speaking of the influence of the planets or of the signs of the zodiac; they spoke also of the character of the individuals who should be born in such or such a part of the year.

Hon. P. Reddy Saved a Life.

On Tuesday afternoon, January 5th, the Hon. Patrick Reddy saved the life of a woman from the hands of a would-be assassin at the postoffice in Sacramento. The man who drew the revolver and attempted to do the killing is P. J. Hulsman, a prominent young farmer, who is well known throughout Sacramento county, and a member of a highly respected German family. Hulsman met his sister, Mrs. W. T. Krigbaum, in the postoffice, and after having a heated argument with the woman, he drew a revolver and was upon the point of killing her when the Hon. Patrick Reddy, of San Francisco, grabbed Hulsman's revolver and prevented the murder. Senator Reddy and Stenographer Drew were passing the Post Office on their way from the State Capitol, when they noticed a crowd come pouring out from the Post Office building. The ex Senator asked what was the matter, and one man said that some body was in there trying to murder a woman. The lawyer wanted to know if there was nobody to protect her, and the man said that everybody had rushed out of the way. Reddy then dashed into the building, followed by Drew. He saw a man threatening a woman, and nobody to protect her. Reddy, who has only one arm, and that the left, grappled with the man. The man swung around, pistol in hand, and tried to shoot Reddy. The gritty lawyer grappled the pistol with his only hand, and, in putting his hand under the trigger, had the thumb cut.. The man wrested the pistol away and again tried to use it, but Reddy's left grabbed him on the wrist with a grip of iron and held him as in a vice. The man struggled to free himself in order to try to shoot Reddy; but, as the lawyer subsequently remarked, he "objected to any such method of procedure." While Drew was trying to assist Reddy, a friend of the would-be murderer came up and after considerable parleying the latter handed over the pistol—Reddy all the while, notwithstanding his mangled thumb, holding the man's wrist in a grip of iron. Officer Talbot took Hulsman in custody and locked him up in the City Prison.

On Sunday, Jan. 17th, religious services will be held as follows: Preaching service in the morning at Lone Pine to commence at 11 o'clock. In the afternoon at Georges Creek at 2:30, and in the evening at Independence to commence at 7 o'clock. Subject of evening discourse, "The Wondrous Power of the Cross." All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Frank Mason, arrested at Bishop for furnishing intoxicating liquor to an Indian, and bound over to appear in the Superior Court, had a hearing on Wednesday last, plead guilty, and was sentenced by Judge Lamar to six months imprisonment at Folsom. Sheriff Given started below with the prisoner yesterday morning.

Schober's big team passed through town Monday en route to Mojave for freight.

The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of the Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

A CLANKING GHOST.

Awful Experience of a Chicago Man In a Missouri Hotel.

"The most disagreeable experience in my travels," said the man from Chicago, "was when I awakened in the middle of the night in a Missouri hotel and heard a chain clank in my room. I don't know whether it is the association of a clanking chain that makes the sound so dismal or the mere fact of being awakened by a noise that shows the presence of something living, but I don't know of a more unpleasant awakening.

"I sat up in bed, but could see nothing, for the room was as dark as a pocket, and my heart thumped with suspense as I heard that weird clank, clank, clank, accompanied by a strange shuffling noise that was quite as mysterious and baffling. I reached under my pillow and drew out my"—

"Revolver?" suggested the man who finishes everybody's sentences.

"Naw, my whisky flask. I took a pull that would have made my wife give me a temperance lecture if she could have seen me"—

"And what became of it?"

"The whisky?"

"No, no, the clanking ghost."

"Well, I fell off to sleep after awhile, and when I got up in the morning and investigated, I found out what it was."

"A maniac?"

"No; I was the only maniac. It was curled up under my bed, chain and all, and it turned out to be a pet coon that the hotel people owned and which had escaped from its quarters and found its way to my room. But I wouldn't put in another night like that for a farm and wood lot!"—St. Louis Republic.

Tennyson and His Wife.

Tennyson was devoted to his wife, but, like a man of true taste, he wrote very little about his feeling for her. That beautiful dedication beginning, "Dear, near and true," is that bit of his writing which will be most often associated with her name. She was a shrewd critic of her husband's work. Tennyson has been accused of inability to fuse the different portions of a long poem, and the difference in style between "The Coming of Arthur" and "The Passing of Arthur" and the other "Idylls of the King" has been cited in illustration. Concerning this difference Lady Tennyson said to her son only two days before her death, "He said 'The Coming of Arthur' and 'The Passing of Arthur' are purposely simpler in style than the other idylls as dealing with the awfulness of birth and death," and she wished this statement of the poet to be put on record in her son's biography of his father.—New York Tribune.

A Queer Coin.

Fully half of the grown up people of France believe the old story that Napoleon Bonaparte put a check for 100,000 francs in a silver 5 franc piece and that the coin is yet in circulation. They say that the people did not want the 5 franc piece, and that in order to create a demand for it Napoleon resorted to the device mentioned. The check or treasury order, it is said, was written upon asbestus paper and inclosed in the metal at the time the coin was made. Thousands of 5 franc pieces are annually broken open and have been so inspected since the story of the check was first circulated.—New York Journal.

The Clown and the Missionary.

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

The father had been in charge of the workroom of a china painting firm. "That's all knocked off now," said Teddy Catty, and he explained lamely and naively how people wanted "high art" nowadays, and how consequently his father's old firm had gone out of business. His father had been with it 40 years, and "he died pretty soon after he lost his place."

The mother had been a ballet girl before she married, and she had numbers of relatives in various branches of the "show business." The children, four of them, were all put on the stage in pantomimes and such things when they were little. Of the family there were now left only the one brother and sister.

No, Emmy was not on the stage, "not in no way." Though his accent was so good, the little clown's grammar was not upon a dull level of correctness. "Emmy never exactly liked the stage, her mother never exactly wanted her to go on it," and just when they did not know what she should do she solved the problem the old way and married—married a scene painter at the Lyceum theater.

"You may know by that that he's a good one. He was only in a small position when Emmy married him, but he's one of the head ones now. Then, you know, he knew some real artist painters, and Emmy—she didn't have any children, and she thought she'd like to learn to paint pictures, and she did. Her husband's awful proud of her."

It was the fifth day out when, after much narrative that, as is the way of talk, did not advance the story, we reached this point.

We were again on deck, and Amy and I were lying in our chairs gazing over a tossing dark sea at a red sunset, while Teddy Catty sat facing us.

"You wouldn't think Emmy was my sister," he said. "She's like another kind. She's a beauty, and she's just like a swell, a nice swell, in her ways, and then she's good. My, she's good!"

"Is she religious?" I ventured.

"Now, you know—yes—but then it's hard to say exactly what different people mean," and the boy gave himself up with grave pleasure to the serious business of accurately informing us as to Emmy's spiritual life. "She is as religious as she can be one way," he went on, "and then the other she only goes as far as she can without feeling as if she was throwing over the rest of us. Her husband he thinks religious people ain't his kind, and of course I'm nowhere with 'em, and Emmy can't make herself up to contract with them that despises us. You wouldn't believe what she thinks of me, you wouldn't indeed. So she just goes without religion except what she can get reading the Bible and"—half hesitating and softening his tone—"and praying. She says she believes we can be good that way. She wants me to try. She is good, good. I wish, though, she could be with real religious people, some kind. Our grandmother, one of 'em, was a great chapel goer. She was an independent. I think Emmy would be happier that way."

He turned his face toward the angry gloom of the sea and the fading western sky, and we were all silent. What a comforting glimpse of human nature!

Presently Amy said, with an odd little accession of formal courtesy in her tone: "I hope, Mr. Catty, you have a picture of your sister that you can show us. I should like to know how she looks."

Yes, he had her picture in his stateroom. He wanted us to see it.

The limitless night was darkening around us in momentary pulsations. We left the wild, soul searching scene for the petty, pretty glare of the cabin. While we were drinking our tea Teddy Caddy brought us the photograph.

It seems out of harmony now with the fleshly reaction from the infinite things of the spirit that had just come upon us. We had to give our poor flagging souls a tug to make them respond to the unconscious awe that looked, Madonnalike, upon us. You never saw a little child's face more deeply, simply serious.

The next day I took the picture to show to the missionary. He smiled benevolently as I told of the quaint brother and sister, but being a missionary and not an artist and seeing nothing to do for them his mind inclined to wander. Yet once or twice afterward as he walked the deck with one of his small children by the hand—he always had one with him when he did not have two—he tried to join in our conversation with Teddy Catty, but when he saw the little fellow draw back overawed he readily enough, with a shade of relief perhaps, abandoned the gentle attack.

This trio was not often in session, so to say, for Teddy Catty was very modest and was scrupulously careful not to intrude upon us, but he was sure to be within beckoning distance whenever Amy was sketching. The sight exercised an absurd fascination upon him.

It was easy to see that he regarded me as of an altogether inferior race of beings as compared to Amy. With me he could talk on occasion, but to her he could scarcely more than speak when he was spoken to. This dumb shyness, together with his professional position, puzzled Amy.

"Do you suppose," said she, "that he is anything of a clown, that honest little owl?"

In truth, there seemed nothing clownlike about Teddy Catty except the clownishness of which I have spoken, the touch of oddity that made his identity seem a little humorous. But then I had seen successful comedians flourish on nothing more than a lesser degree of the same thing, and I knew, too, what is always puzzling to the world, that the possession of the technique of any art enables the possessor to mold into expression much of his nature which he may lack either freedom, will or desire to express in his life. So, you see, I was not surprised when my interest in Teddy Catty's artistic side was gratified by a chance verdict, but not a worthless one, that he was a good clown. It came from the spectacular amazonian captain on the occasion of my first conversation with her. It happened one afternoon as I was walking the deck that I stumbled, and simultaneously the ship gave a lurch, and I was thrown upon the histrionic amazonian breast. Upon such a provocation to unreasoning resentment her boundless good nature instantly asserted itself, with pleasure in the opportunity, and then in an instant more she realized another opportunity—she would gratify a thirst for knowledge. Having helped me to my feet, she hurried to say:

"I've heard Teddy Catty speak about you. He said you've been on the stage yourself. He's awful taken up seeing that friend of yours paint, ain't he? He's dead proud of that sister of his a-painting. Did you know anything about him before he came on board? Did you ever see him in the ring? He's a good clown, a real good one. They say he'll get with Barnum next likely. There's some fun to him—not all just as if you'd pulled a string. I tell him he ought to go on the stage—comic opera. He can't sing much, but that don't matter for a funny man. I've been in comic opera some, not a principal, of course, but I can get more with the Kiralfys and in pantomime over here," with a toss of the head toward the bow of the ship.

After having dreamed away half a lifetime in this little world upon the waters and having all but forgotten previous states of existence—at the end of ten days, that is—we anchored off Queenstown. There, according to expectation, we met a party of pleasant acquaintances of both sexes, and straightway we sank—rose?—were transformed from the lofty epicene patrons of Teddy Catty into something perhaps more like conventional young ladies than some old fashioned people would suppose possible.

It is strange now to think how unimpressively on this changed mood fell the news that Teddy Catty at Queenstown had met dark sorrow. A letter had come telling him his sister was dead. Not that we were indifferent. No. I remember feeling his bereavement with one of those appalling thumps of realization that visit most of us often enough to point the blessing of our usual "wadding of stupidity." But, after all, this heart stopping sensation—as usual, I think—came rather from a sudden vision of the tragic conditions of all life than from direct, simple sympathy with Teddy Catty. Poor Teddy Catty had all at once become a very remote little figure, all but invisible, and there was so much to talk over with our friends. News was to be heard, experiences were to be exchanged and plans to be made.

It was a relief when his roommate, a young man—we knew nothing more about him—came to me and with stammering, misplaced apologies asked if I thought, if I supposed, that the missionary would not mind, or did I think he would mind— "Does Mr. Catty wish to see the missionary?" I asked, with a sense of relief, and I went gladly to summon him.

The missionary was, as usual, occupied with his numerous little ones. His wife had been sick throughout the voyage and had scarcely left her stateroom.

He turned his bowed head a little from me as he listened, as if he were steeling himself against a personal misfortune.

"He begins where we leave off," I said to myself as I looked upon his pity moved face.

He came back to me after he had taken the children to his wife and said, "If I can comfort this poor boy through the word and love of my Master—there is no other comfort—I'll not forget it's to you I owe the opportunity"—there was self reproach in the missionary's tone. "I never should have known any thing about him."

GRANT AND PORTER.

The Latter's First Meeting With His Subsequent Chief.

While sitting in my quarters in the little town of Chattanooga about an hour after nightfall on the evening of Friday, Oct. 23, 1863, an orderly brought me a message from General George H. Thomas, commander of the Army of the Cumberland, on whose staff I was serving, summoning me to headquarters. A storm had been raging for two days, and a chilling rain was still falling. A few minutes' walk brought me to the plain wooden, one story dwelling occupied by the commander, which was situated on Walnut street, near Fourth, and upon my arrival I found him in the front room on the left side of the hall, with three members of his staff and several strange officers.

In an armchair facing the fireplace was seated a general officer, slight in figure and of medium stature, whose face bore an expression of weariness. He was carelessly dressed, and his uniform coat was unbottoned and thrown back from his chest. He held a lighted cigar in his mouth and sat in a stooping posture, with his head bent slightly forward. His clothes were wet, and his trousers and topboots were spattered with mud. General Thomas approached this officer, and, turning to me and mentioning me by name, said, "I want to present you to General Grant." Thereupon the officer seated in the chair, without changing his position, glanced up, extended his arm to its full length, shook hands and said in a low voice and speaking slowly, "How do you do?" This was my first meeting with the man with whom I was destined afterward to spend so many of the most interesting years of my life.

The strange officers present were members of General Grant's staff. Charles A. Dana, assistant secretary of war, who had been for some time with the Army of the Cumberland, had also entered the room. The next morning he sent a dispatch to the war department, beginning with the words, "Grant arrived last night, wet, dirty and well."—"Campaigning With Grant," by General Horace Porter, in Century.

Time Occupied by Dreams.

The time occupied by a dream is one of the marvels of sleep. In the work entitled "The Philosophy of Mystery" we read of a man who dreamed that he had enlisted as a soldier; that he had joined his regiment and traveled to a foreign country; that he finally deserted on account of the harsh treatment he had received at the hands of his superior officers; that he had been apprehended and carried back to his regiment; that upon arriving there he was tried by court martial, condemned to be shot and was led out for execution. At this moment the guns of the executioners exploded, and the sound awoke the dreamer. It was clear now that a loud noise in an adjoining room had both produced the dream and awakened the dreamer almost at the same moment.

Works and Faith.—A man who labors grows in grace. We will be judged by our works, not by our church-going and orthodoxy.—Rev. L. Y. Graham, Presbyterian, Philadelphia, Pa.

Salvation.—The supreme object of the Gospel is salvation—salvation from sin to righteousness. In this claim it has never failed, wherever it has met a believing soul.—Rev. A. B. Davidson, Methodist, Kansas City, Mo.

Happiness.—If man would give more attention to the study of the Gospel and the spreading of its influences, there would be more happiness and the country would enjoy greater prosperity.—Rev. E. T. Welford, Presbyterian, Newport, Va.

Mere Words.—We are not as careful with our words as we ought to be. We often wound and are wounded by hasty or angry or rude words; we say things not soon forgotten by the hearer, and for which we feel sorry ever afterwards.—Rev. O. F. Gregory, Baptist, Baltimore, Md.

Modern Religion.—Righteousness is no longer the cultivation of the Christian graces, but the endowment of a college of a hospital. The statute book is depended upon to keep men honest, and a police force and prisons usurp the functions of a moral law.—Rev. R. A. White, Universalist, Chicago, Ill.

Religious Education.—If we would have fellowship with God, we must teach the nation the value of religious education. The State puts the civil before religious training, but that is contrary to all Christianity. The child should be taught religion from its earliest infancy.—Rev. Walter Calley, Episcopalian, Boston, Mass.

The Mother Church.—The church is our mother, and when her sons and daughters are born to her they become Christians. Whatever age you may be makes no difference, you are still a babe in Christ. The Church, or mother, is supposed to nourish and care for her children, just as your earthly mother.—Rev. Dr. Williams, Evangelist, Marshalltown, Iowa.

The Law.—God's law governs the acts of mankind in their daily life and builds the edifice in which we exist, as it does the business house of the body in which we live. We cannot mention a lawmaker without mentioning a lawbreaker. Every law contains righteousness and equity for all alike.—Rev. J. H. Morrison, Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn.

The Law of Suffering.—God's original plan was one of happiness for man, even on earth. Man, indeed, was to be submitted to a little trial, but only such a one as love for his creator should have made light and easy. But man sinned and so marred his own destiny, and with sin came suffering and sorrow, so that now the law of suffering is the universal law for mankind.—Rev. J. P. Ryan, Catholic, Davenport, Iowa.

A Second Lincoln.—If the Christian Church shall ever need another Paul, a Luther or a Wesley, God will raise one up. If in the onward march of civilization it shall again become necessary to strike from the scarred ankles of an oppressed people the cruel shackles of slavery God will send to them a Lincoln.—Rev. T. W. Davis, Methodist, Philadelphia, Pa.

The Sabbath.—The Lord's Day, religiously observed, is a day of intense labor, and not one of rest. Labor performed as unto the Lord is seeking to better the condition of others. Idleness, then, on the part of Christians, is as much a desecration of the Lord's Day as labor was a desecration of the old Jewish Sabbath.—Rev. John H. Boyet, Baptist, Lexington, Ky.

Love.—Love is the greatest thing in the universe—the greatest in earth or in heaven. Love is the inspiration of all celestial song. It is the bond between father and son, and unites the redeemed family in glory. God is love. Christ is the expression of God's love. Christ's humiliation and sacrifice are the measure of that love.—Rev. W. W. Landrum, Baptist, Atlanta, Ga.

The Battle of the Church.—Look over the history of Christianity and mark its progress. Every step has been contested, many and severe have been the battles in which sin, crime and corruption have been engaged against righteousness, honesty and justice. Nor have these contests ceased; we stand face to face with them to-day.—Rev. Joseph Speer, Presbyterian, Wheeling, W. Va.

Ineffectual Trick.

An amusing example of two souls with but a single thought is the following, furnished by one of the participants:

Many years ago, he says, I was in camp with a friend of mine in Canada. Toward morning I awoke shivering with cold. The fire was very low. My companion was sound asleep.

Well, it isn't nice to get out of a warm blanket to haul frosty logs to the fire, so I gave Wyndham a kick, and then pretended to be asleep.

There was no response, and by and by I tried another kick. Then the old scoundrel burst out laughing.

"I did the same thing to you fifteen minutes ago," he said. "That's how you came to wake up."

Then we both turned out, and soon had a fire going.

To Honor Nelson's Memory.

A subscription has just been started in London, under the patronage of the Prince of Wales, which has for its aim the restoration of the old church of Burnham Thorpe, where Nelson was baptized, and where his mother and father lie buried. It is the intention of the committee that has the subscription in charge to have the windows of the church decorated with scenes recalling the career of the victor of Trafalgar.

Wheeler—What makes you think she loves you? Tyre—Oh, she's been hinting of late how much she likes my bicycle.—Philadelphia North American.

Society people ought to work a while for a rest.

FREE SILVER.

The coinage of silver might have been too free, but the free use of it in a small sum may be a very big investment with very sure and large profits. What it costs to buy a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil for the cure of rheumatism is within the reach of the poorest. It is the best investment in this line—best cure, and the profits are sure because it will surely cure. This is so well known it is almost a maxim, and so much good is wrought out of he free use of so little that a strong, active workman can be made out of a man who before may have been a helpless invalid or a hobbling cripple.

Her Loss His Gain.

Dramatis personæ, a small street gamin leaning idly against a tree. On the opposite side of the street a young woman carrying her pocketbook in her hand. Coming toward her the ubiquitous man who rescues damsels in distress. Just as these two met on the muddy crossing the young woman dropped her pocketbook in the mud. It fell open, and the usual assortment of thimbles, pennies, scissors, samples and dimes was scattered broadcast.

"Allow me," said the young man, and the owner of the pocketbook blushed becomingly and allowed him to go down on his knees in the mud to rescue her possessions. When he had picked up the rolling dimes and pennies and restored them with the other articles to the purse, he saw that she was still uneasy.

"Is anything missing?" he asked solicitously.

"No. That is, nothing but a penny."

"Oh," and lifting his hat he walked on, not having received so much as a "thank you" for the service. But then she was very pretty.

There is a climax to this story. When the young woman had ceased looking for lost property, she went on her way, and the street gamin darted across the street from his post of observation, and in a moment he had found that lost penny under the stone where he saw it roll, and as he walked away with it hidden in his cheek butter wouldn't have melted in his mouth.—Detroit Free Press.

Coal Mine Worked by One Man.

The smallest coal mine in the world is in the southern province of New Zealand, where, according to the reports of the inspectors of mines for the colony, the Murray Creek colliery is worked by one man, T. Bolitho, a Chinaman, who owns, manages and works this small but to him valuable coal mine. There is another small colliery in the same province worked by one man with the assistance of a donkey. The next smallest colliery is in England, in the village of Nelson, in Lancashire. It is situated near the Colliers' Arms and affords employment for two miners, father and son, who combine in themselves the positions of proprietors, managers, miners and haulers of the undertaking. The have the assistance of a donkey, and all the output of the mine is sold to the householders who live in the village or its immediate vicinity.—Exchange.

Archbishop of Canterbury.

The archbishop of Canterbury is referred to as "his grace," and he writes himself archbishop, etc., "divina providentia," whereas other prelates use the phrase "divina permissione." He is the first peer in the realm. At coronations he places the crown on the head of the sovereign, and the king and queen are his domestic parishioners. The bishop of London is his provincial dean, the bishop of Winchester his subdean, the bishop of Lincoln his chancellor, and the bishop of Rochester his chaplain.

A Carlyle Anecdote.

A Scotch visitor to the Carlyles in Cheyne row was much struck with the soundproof room which the sage had contrived for himself in the attic, lighted from the top, and where no sight or sound from outside could penetrate. "My certes, this is fine," cried the old friend, with unconscious sarcasm. "Here ye may write and study all the rest of your life, and no human being be one bit the wiser."—Household Words.

TRIED MANY REMEDIES.

Paine's Celery Compound was the Only One That Succeeded.

The essential difference between Paine's celery compound and the bewildering number of sarsaparillas and nervines that its success has brought into existence is that Paine's celery compound furnishes just the appropriate nutriment to the exhausted nerves, and securely builds up the system against disease, while the unscientific remedies confuse and add to the derangement of the organs.

Paine's celery compound not only relieves, but effectively and permanently cures.

The most permanent and direct cure for debility, nervous weakness, languor, and a "run-down" condition, is the strong, reliable Paine's celery compound. The rasping, irritating effect of a badly nourished nervous system upon all the organs of the body ceases when this medicine is used.

Paine's celery compound is the most advanced nerve and brain strengthener and restorer known to medical science.

The tired, worn-out sufferer who is not advancing towards health, is falling back. There is no standstill in bad health. One can endure a headache or a backache once; one can endure it twice, but the repeated sick headache and the constant pain in the back and in the region of the heart must be got rid of. For the permanent and positive cure of these unhealthy states of the body, as evinced by repeated attacks of rheumatism, neuralgia, sleeplessness, or kidney trouble, there is nothing to be compared for a moment with the great discovery of Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth medical school—Paine's celery compound.

If you are out of health or despondent because of repeated trials of other remedies, take a fresh start. The bracing weather is in your favor.

Here is the experience—like that of hundreds of others—of Mrs. Lydia M. Hayden of Marion, Ind.:

"Before commencing the use of Paine's celery compound I was treated by many doctors, and tried many remedies, but did not get any better. I seemed to be all broken down. I was tired all the time, and my constitution seemed to be giving out. I weighed only 15 pounds last fall when I commenced using Paine's celery compound. In less than two months I weighed 124 pounds, an unusual weight for me. I have had better health ever since, and have felt better this summer than I have for years.

"My little daughter was away from home on a visit, and came home looking as if she had had a hard sickness. I went right away and got her a bottle of Paine's celery compound, and she has had better health since than she ever had in her life, eats hearty and is growing fast."

There is no woman, who, in justice to herself, can fail to take Paine's celery compound under similar circumstances.

THE LINE RIDER.

Over the mesa, 'neath the milk-white moon,
Leisurely riding through the wonder-night,
Went Sanderson, line rider, full of dreams
Of young Dolores, sweetest of brown maids.
(Something lies hidden in the coyote grass.)

Only a month ago those canyon walls,
Moon-white, beheld a shadowy train wind down—
Contrabandista, laden with mescal;
Pepe their chief, exultant, almost home.
(Something lies sullen in the coyote grass.)

Apache rumors had preceded them.
Herding white settlers homeward. Sanderson,
Frontier wise, watched the canny Mexicans,
Saw them untroubled; couched, and got his prey.
(Something lies vengeful in the coyote grass.)

Musing, his firm mouth smiling now and then
With reminiscent tenderness, he rode,
Unheeding how that Pepe had fled unscathed,
Until his horse, snorting and trembling, shied—
(A sudden spring from out the coyote grass!)

Oh, brown Dolores! musing 'neath the moon
That floods the homely old adobe walls,
Ask Pepe, when he comes to you to-night,
Whose horse he rides? What makes his dagger dark?
(Something lies silent in the coyote grass!)

THE ACTOR'S DOUBLE.

We were talking about spirit manifestations at the Thirty-nine Club, and retailing the usual second or third-hand accounts of deceased ladies and gentlemen showing themselves to their sorrowing relatives.

"It is strange the tricks which our brains will sometimes play us," said Dr. Macpherson. "I remember once seeing a ghost myself, and I can tell you that the sensation is a very curious one. It was a good many years ago, in my examination days, and I had been sitting up until the early hours 'cramming.' Everybody in the house had long since gone to bed, where I ought to have been myself, so I was rather surprised when I glanced up from my book to see somebody sitting at the table where I myself had been a few moments before writing. I felt quite startled for an instant, until I recognized the intruder. He was a little hazy, but I could see plainly enough who it was."

"A dead relative?" asked Major Dennett, who was a firm believer in good, old-fashioned ghosts.

Macpherson answered in his peculiarly quiet way: "No, it was myself. The experience of seeing one's own ghost is not altogether unusual, I believe."

"Now, I do not think your experience was half so remarkable as one of mine," said Gilbert Dane, the well-known actor and manager of the Howard Theater, who happened to be there that night. Dane is not a member of the Thirty-nine, but had come with Macpherson. Most of the brain specialist's friends are in the profession, a fact which is, perhaps, due to the year which he himself spent on the stage as a young man.

"My story begins prosaically," said the actor, when we begged to hear it. "I lost the latchkey with which I let myself into the theater, and took somebody else's to the locksmith's to have a duplicate made. I agreed to call for it the following morning as I was going up to town for rehearsal. I was living at Putney then, and we were actively preparing a play which deserved a better fate than it received, if thought and preparation go for anything, for I came near making myself ill over it. I was feeling out of sorts on the morning that I called for the latchkey, and when the locksmith swore positively that he had given me the thing already—that less than ten minutes previously I had come for the key, paid for it, and taken it away with me—I will confess that I lost my temper, and stormed at the fellow, but I could not get him to budge a line from his story. He seemed to have an idea that I was playing a practical joke, and the only result of my talking was that I nearly lost my train at Waterloo. It was moving when I reached the platform, and I had to run for the only compartment of which the door was open, near the end of the train.

"The compartment contained two other passengers, but if I glanced at them at all I noticed nothing except that each was pretty well hidden behind a daily paper. I had fortunately bought my own paper before calling at the locksmith's, and I speedily followed their example. So far the story is painfully commonplace. Now comes the truly remarkable experience which has stamped the doings of that day indelibly on my memory."

The actor paused to strike a match and relight his cheroot, which he had allowed to go out, and we all watched him in silence, wondering what was coming. Macpherson only had the air of a man who had heard the story before.

"I had become rather interested in my paper," Dane went on, when the cigar was alight again, "and did not notice my companions talking until one of them started telling an anecdote. Then it gradually dawned upon me that the story he was telling was one that I considered my own particular property, and when I listened it struck me that the story was being told, not only in my exact words, but also in my own voice.

"The story and the voice startled me, but it is difficult to describe my feelings when I put down my paper to glance at the narrator."

"It was yourself?" asked Major Dennett excitedly as the actor paused, and Dane nodded.

"Yes, gentlemen, I saw seated at the other end of the compartment, by the window, opposite his companion, a figure that was an exact facsimile of the reflection which I see in my glass every day when I have dressed for the part of a respectable citizen. It was myself, complete in every detail of face and attire."

"An optical delusion, I suppose?" I suggested, and the actor shook his head.

"No; that was the first idea that occurred to me—that I had been working and worrying too much over the new play, and my brain had played me a trick. The unconcerned way in which the third man glanced at me encouraged me in the belief, for the likeness, unless I was imagining it, was enough to attract instant attention. I wondered whether there was actually a man sitting and talking where I had seen and heard my facsimile; for the third man, an ordinary, every-day individual, had not spoken a word to him, and might from his expression have been listening to his anecdote or simply thinking. I was relieved when he laughed at the point when my 'double,' as I began to call his companion, came to the joke of the story, but when he opened his mouth it was only to increase the mystery of the affair, for it showed me that my double possessed my name, as well as my voice, my dress, my face, my figure.

"I began to wonder then not whether the man at the window was a reality, but whether I was really myself, and it certainly would not have surprised me if I had looked in a mirror and found it reflect back a face that was unfamiliar to me. It is strange how quickly a single phenomenon will sometimes change all one's fixed opinions on a subject of the supernatural. I felt I must speak to the man if only to prove whether I was awake or dreaming, and I seized the opportunity of introducing myself by hearing 'my double' called by my name.

"'Excuse me,' I said, addressing him, 'but I heard your friend just now call you "Mr. Dane." I wonder whether we are related at all, for that happens to be my name, and we seem to bear a striking similarity to one another.'

"'My double' turned and surveyed me through his single eyeglass in exactly the same manner as that with which I should have surveyed a stranger who addressed me in the train.

"'I really do not know whether we are related,' he said, in the voice I use when I wish to be slightly patronizing. 'I am Gilbert Dane of the Howard Theater,' and he actually handed me one of my own cards.

"There was something in the substantial nature of the familiar bit of pasteboard that brought back a little of my common sense and relieved me from the state of stupefaction into which the phenomenon had driven me.

"'Come, this is a very clever trick,' I said with a smile, which I am afraid was rather feeble. 'You have certainly succeeded in startling me. Now I should like your own card, so that I may know whom to congratulate on a very clever performance.'"

"And what did the mystery do?" I inquired with interest when the actor paused.

"He did exactly what I should have done if a stranger addressed me in the same manner. He became angry and asked me what I meant and whom I called myself.

"'Well, until to-day I have been in the habit of calling myself Gilbert Dane of the Howard Theater——' I was beginning, keeping as cool as I could, when 'my double' interrupted me in a tone which I still recognized perfectly as my own.

"'Well! you had better not do so any more,' he said, sharply, 'or you will find yourself in the hands of the police. I see that you have been imitating my dress, too, which I cannot help, but the use of my name is another thing.'

"We had just reached Vauxhall, our first stopping place, as he spoke, and a ticket collector who knows me by sight came to the door. My double caught his eye first.

"'I wish you would tell this gentleman who I am,' he said, and the man answered promptly:

"'Certainly, sir; you are Mr. Dane, the actor.'

"He looked startled when I asked him the same question.

"'I should call you a very good imitation,' he said when he had recovered from his surprise.

"This was becoming decidedly uncomfortable, and I began to wonder how I could prove to anybody that I was not a good imitation of myself. The ticket collector's ready acceptance of my double as the real 'Mr. Dane' showed me how helpless I should be in an appeal to anyone who did not know me well. But I felt that it would not do for two Gilbert Danes to remain at large. The question which one was to surrender the title must be settled at once. It struck me that the easiest way to do it would be to go together to the theater and submit the questions to the company assembled for the rehearsal. I suggested this course to my facsimile, and he surprised me by accepting it readily.

"'I warn you that I shall detain you when it is settled and send for the police,' he said in my haughtiest voice.

"It was what I was intending to do with him."

"And did you both go back?" somebody asked.

The actor paused to light another cheroot.

Dane nodded.

"Yes, together. The third man left us at Waterloo," he said. "You may not believe it, but I felt rather uneasy as I approached the stage door, and the fact that I had no latchkey to open it for myself seemed a calamity. 'My double' calmly produced his and marched me into my own theater with the air of a proprietor. Then he closed the door behind him, and, changing his voice and manner, suddenly turned quietly: 'And now, Mr. Dane, I will puzzle you no more, but apologize for giving you so much trouble, which I hope you will think repaid by the enjoyment of a unique sensation. The fact is that I am very anxious to go on the stage under your auspices, and I thought that this would be the best way to obtain an introduction to you, and at the same time show you a specimen of my acting in the part of your understudy. You will admit at least that I understand the art of making up. Now are you going to give me an engagement or to send for the police.'

"'And you gave him the engagement, I suppose?' I asked.

"'Yes; I have always regretted that he threw it up before the year was out, and returned to his former profession, that of a medical man.'

"'It was he, of course, that called for the latchkey in the morning?'

"'Yes; he had been in the shop when I ordered it, and the fact finally determined him to carry out the affair which he had been pondering for some time.'

"'But he must have haunted you like a shadow beforehand,' put in Major Dennett, 'to learn all your gestures and that. I should hardly think the result was worth the trouble.'

Macpherson, who had been sitting quietly in the background, surprised us by replying for his friend.

"'Excuse me, Major,' he said, in his usual quiet way, 'but you make a mistake there. Any man would have been glad to give £100 down for the engagement which Dane offered me straight-away. It cost me less than £10 for clothes, and about a month of study; and my time was not worth £90 a month then, or I should not have thought of giving up medicine and taking to the stage.'"—Tid-Bits.

An Apple Problem.

Once upon a time there were two old men who sat in the market early every morning and sold apples. Each one had thirty apples, and one of the old men sold two for a cent, and the other old man sold three for a cent. In that way the first old man got fifteen cents for his basket of apples, while the second old man received ten cents; so that together they made twenty-five cents each day. But one day the old apple-man who sold three for a cent was too sick to go to the market, and he asked his neighbor to take his apples and sell them for him. This the other old man very kindly consented to do, and when he got to the market with the two baskets of apples, he said to himself, "I will put all the apples into one basket, for it will be easier than picking them out of two baskets." So he put the sixty apples into one basket, and he said to himself, "Now, if I sell two apples for one cent, and my old friend sells three for one cent, that is the same thing as selling five apples for two cents. Therefore I will sell five for two cents." When he had sold the sixty apples he found he had only twenty-four cents, which was right; because there are twelve fives in sixty, and twice twelve are twenty-four. But if the other old man had been there, and each had sold his apples separately, they would have received twenty-five cents. Now, how is that explained?—St. Nicholas.

Joan of Arc Before the Judges.

The questions addressed to Joan, and her answers day by day, have been transmitted in the records of the court. To read them is to understand the brutal ferocity with which she was tortured, until, turning on her accuser, she cried, "You call yourself my judge; be careful what you do, for I am indeed sent by the Lord, and you place yourself in great danger."

To answers almost sublime succeeded answers filled with naive ingenuity. Questions were plied, traitorously conceived, concerning the visions which had come to her, and the celestial voices which she heard, and which throughout her mission had counseled and guided her. But on this point she was firmly silent. It was as though it were a secret which she was forbidden to betray. She consented to take an oath to speak nothing but the truth, but concerning her visions she made a reservation. "You could cut my head off before I would speak," she protested. At night, in the darkness of her dungeon, St. Catherine and St. Margaret appeared to her, and celestial voices comforted her. She avowed that she had seen them "with the eyes of her body * * * and when they leave me," she added, "I wish that they would take me with them."—Century.

A Spectral Boatman.

There is a shivery, shaky legend among the people who live along the Hudson river which is to the effect that that stream is the everlasting boating waters of a specter who is personified as Ramhout Van Dam. Away back in colonial times Ramhout and his friends were drinking until late at night. Finally this man Ramhout started for home, some distance up the river, in his boat, swearing that he would row the distance if it took a "month of Sundays." Ramhout never reached home, and the superstitious people say that he has been condemned to row till judgment day.

Improved Pull for Doors.

The cut shows an improved way of using the card and wheel pull for doors. The door jamb is made very wide by nailing on a piece to the ordinary jamb. In this, insert a small pulley wheel at a slight angle, so that the rope will not pull so much across the edge of the wheel when the door is wide open. The weight runs up and down upon the back side of the jamb. The door should move easily so that as light a weight as possible may be used. Then the door will open easily, and yet pull to with great promptness. With all inside barn and stable doors fixed in this way, much trouble, and often loss, will be avoided by cattle and other animals getting into forbidden quarters, because of doors carelessly left open.—Orange Judd Farmer.

A Sensible Suggestion.

The middle-aged woman, or one whose children have grown past the destructive age, should get the comfort there is in the pretty things which she has accumulated. She should not hoard her embroidered table decorations, keep her silver wrapped in cotton flannel bags or the sofa pillows put away for fear they will be worn out by use. Now is the time to enjoy them. If she thinks that it would be better to keep them for the children she should remember that when these things fall to their possession they will be out of date, but not antique enough to have any value beyond the sentimental one that "they were mother's." Most grown-up children take a pride in seeing their mother's home up to date; if they do not they certainly do not deserve a legacy of what might have made their mother's life more comfortable and more enjoyable.—Grange Homes.

Warming Water for Stock.

A plan for warming the water for stock during cold weather is shown in the engraving herewith. One end of the trough is partitioned off, and over a square opening in the partition is tightly fitted a galvanized iron box, the water flowing freely out into this iron box. Under this iron box a small oil stove is placed, admission being had by means of a small door in the front of the trough. With a tight cover, the water in the trough can have the chill removed very easily. It is especially important to have the iron box as low down in the trough as possible, so that the water at the bottom of the trough may be warmed, as well as that at the top. If possible, then, let the end compartment extend below the main body of the trough, so that the iron box may open into the lower part of the trough. As the water is heated, it will rise, and the colder water from the bottom be drawn in, to be heated in its turn.—American Agriculturist.

HOMEMADE WATER HEATER.

Waste of Corn Fodder.

Early husking of corn is important to save its grain from being wasted by mice and other vermin. But after the corn has been husked the stalks have a new surface exposed to rains. As they are then partially dried, the stalks should be got under cover as soon as possible. If the stalks are wet after being once dried, the waste from rotting goes on much more rapidly than before. If the stalks should heat somewhat in the mow this is better than to leave them exposed to further injury by storms, with little chance of drying out, except as it will be frozen dry by the cold of winter. This freezing of wet stalks takes from them most of their feeding value.

The Quality of Timothy Hay.

One reason why timothy hay is a favorite in the markets is its uniformity of quality. Not being so nitrogenous as clover, it is much less likely to be injured by being wet and heating. The variation in quality is mainly due to early or late cutting, though some livery stable keepers prefer the fully ripened timothy, which is least nutritious because the horse likes the timothy seeds. Clover hay is very apt to become musty and dusty if it has been exposed to fermentation. Timothy hay will not be dusty unless cut in the bloom, and the dust is not so injurious as that from partly decayed clover.

The Farm Mouser.

Mice are a great menace to the farmer's premises. They gather from the fields as autumn approaches, and build nests in stacks and under piles of rubbish and in every available place they can find shelter. These pests must be baffled in every way possible. A few good cats are about as successful mice exterminators as can be found. Some farmers try poison, and we have written many items recommending poison; telling farmers how to arrange them, and the poison box is still worth trying in the small fruit orchard, but experience proves that there is nothing so effective in ridding the farm of mice and keeping them away as a good cat or two. We have experimented with poison in many forms and have noted a partial success in the way of thinning out mice, but when the cat made its appearance, the mouse problem was soon solved. We unhesitatingly recommend keeping a cat or two on every farm.

Sweet Apples for Horses.

A quart or two of sweet apples per day for each horse will be worth more to it than the same bulk of oats additional to its regular ration of hay and grain. The apples are better than any kind of roots, and this year they are everywhere cheap and plenty. Sour apples are nearly as good, but the horses prefer the sweet apples when they can be had. In nutritive value there is very little difference. There is much sweet in what we call a "sour" apple, which is only called "sour" because an acid disguises the sweet it contains.

Handy Style of Wheelbarrow.

A deep wheelbarrow is more useful than one built on the old plan, because it will hold more, and the work of building such a barrow is not much greater. Any one who owns a wheel and irons belonging to an old wheelbarrow can easily construct one by first procuring two stout pieces for the shafts and mortising them together firmly just behind the wheel. The next mortise must come 2 inches from the ground on the legs at A. From this mortise the floor of the barrow must reach forward to B, where it is supported by two false legs mortised into the shafts and reaching within 2 inches of the ground. The sides may be solid from the floor up, or if preferred they may extend only to the top of the shafts, and from this point movable side boards may extend upward. The only disadvantage in having the body solid is in being forced to remove most of the load from between the handles. This wheelbarrow is especially useful in carting leaves, etc., and in handling heavy stones, which are loaded upon it with ease, because so near the ground. If one desires he may arrange a movable bottom, which will permit the load to be deposited without tipping by merely raising the handle.—Farm and Home.

BIG LOADS EASILY MOVED.

Watering Plants in Winter.

There is far more danger of giving house plants too much rather than too little water in winter. During the short days and long nights, with very little sunlight on the soil, it is hard to keep it at a temperature where the plants can grow vigorously. All the surplus water added lowers the temperature until it reaches a point where the plants barely exist without making any growth. If the soil has much vegetable matter, humic acid will be developed at a low temperature and this will poison the plant roots.

Saving Dry Road Dust.

One of the jobs which should be attended to before cold weather is to save a few barrels of dry road dust to be used as dust baths for hens in winter. Nothing contributes more to the health of hens than this. Coal ashes will answer, but they stick to the feathers of fowls worse than road dust will, and give the birds an unsightly appearance. The road dust is coarser, and we think the fowls like to roll in it better than in the white, fine dust that comes from sifting coal ashes.

Phosphate for Clover.

Whenever phosphate is sown with grain, a part of the fertilizer is always appropriated by the clover seed sown with it. Clover is a lime plant, and it also needs the phosphoric acid that is so helpful to the wheat. The phosphate is especially valuable when applied to clover that is to produce a seed crop. Potash is also needed to make clover seed well, and should be applied in some form.

Origin of a Much-Quoted Saw.

The origin of "A fool and his money are soon parted" has not been ascertained with certainty, but the following story is sometimes told: "George Buchanan, tutor to James IV. of Scotland, made a bet with a courtier that he (Buchanan) could make a coarser verse than the courtier; Buchanan rose, and picking up the courtier's money walked off with the remark, 'A fool and his money are soon parted.'"—Ladies' Home Journal.

Telephone Wires and Lightning.

Telephone wires seem to have an important influence in preventing lightning from striking, according to the investigation of the German Telegraph Department. Three hundred and forty towns with telephone systems and 500 towns without them were under observation. In the former lightning struck three times for every hour of storm; in the latter five times. Moreover, the violence of the lightning was much less in the former cases.

FOR LITTLE FOLKS.

A COLUMN OF PARTICULAR INTEREST TO THEM.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

For Fun at a Party.

When the fun at the party lags start up and tell those present quite confidently that you can place a glass of water on the table so that no one can remove it without upsetting it. Of course, every one will say that you can't do it. Without waiting for explanations fill a glass to the brim and cover it with a piece of paper, which comes well over the edges. Leave the paper flat. Place the palm of the hand over it, and by a quick movement turn it upside down upon the table. Withdraw the paper gently. The water will remain in the glass, but no one can move the tumbler without spilling it. With a little practice any boy or girl can do this trick very easily.

Finding Where the Wind Is From.

How many of our boys and girls know how to find the direction of the wind? Of course, if it is blowing a gale any one could tell. But suppose only a gentle breeze is stirring—hardly enough to make the fickle weather-cock decide which way to point—then what would you do?

In such a case an old woodsman or hunter will thrust one finger into his mouth, wetting it well, and then hold it up in the air. The side which feels coldest shows which direction the wind comes from. The reason of this is plain. The more rapid movement of the air from one direction causes the moisture on that side of the finger to evaporate with great rapidity, thus giving the sensation of coolness. Try it and see.

Boys and Girls' Favorite Dogs.

Of all the different kinds of dogs, what is your favorite?

A vote was recently taken among over 1,000 boys and girls of Houston, Tex., as to their favorite dog. It is hardly surprising that 407 of the total number declared in favor of the gentle, knowing, beautiful shepherd dog, or collie. If you have among your friends a shaggy shepherd dog, you are fortunate, indeed. The Newfoundland, big, black and brave, came next, with 370 votes, and then the St. Bernard, with 170 votes. This shows that the young folk of Texas have a decided preference for large dogs. The fourth in favor was the rat terrier, with 99 votes; then the English mastiff, with 25 votes; the bulldog, with 7 votes; the common hound, with 5 votes; the Scotch terrier, with 4 votes; the pointer, with 3 votes; the common spaniel, the water spaniel and the pug, with 2 votes each, and the setter, bloodhound, bull terrier and greyhound, 1 vote each.

Where does the poodle come in, anyway? Perhaps he isn't a favorite in Texas.

Home-Made Toys.

We know that about the first thing a real baby has is a little cradle, so let us make one for our doll baby. This can be done by getting a piece of wood about one-eighth or one-quarter of an inch thick, 12 inches long and eight inches wide, and a real sharp jackknife, or better, a keyhole saw. There are five parts to the cradle—head, foot, two sides and the bottom.

To make the head of the cradle, cut a pattern from paper in the shape you wish, first folding the paper in the middle so as to cut both sides alike; then lay the pattern on your pieces of wood and draw around it with pencils. I made my patterns quite simple, having the rockers attached as in figure 1.

The foot of the cradle is made in the same way, except that it must be a little lower than the head. The two sides are very easy, being in the shape of figure 2. And now comes the bottom, which is only a rectangular piece, like figure 3.

As wood-burning, or poker-painting, as it is called, is used so much, the cradle may be made very pretty by burning some little design on the different pieces. The way this wood-burning can be done is by taking some steel knitting needles which are heated right in the flames of a spirit lamp, and drawing the design with them. If the design is first lightly traced on the wood it can be more accurately burned in with the needles.

After the parts are all nicely cut and burned, glue them together or fasten them with tiny nails, and dolly will have a comfortable resting place.

A Wolf Child.

A writer, Mr. E. W. Bok, tells of the discovery in India of a real Mowgli, or wolf child, such as most of you have read of in the jungle books of that delightful story teller, Rudyard Kipling. This curious little creature was found a number of years ago by some natives who were hunting a wolf. When he saw them he ran into a cave, but was speedily captured. They decided he was a wolf boy about seven years old, a little fellow who had undoubtedly been carried off by the wolves when a baby, and instead of being eaten had been nursed and protected by the mother wolf just as the Mowgli of Kipling's stories was. He naturally became more animal than boy, running on his arms and legs and living like the wild beasts of the jungle. He was put in an orphan asylum and a great effort was made to teach him to be a human being, but it was not very successful. "He still lives," says Mr. Bok, "and is only half human. He eats his food from the ground with his teeth, runs chiefly on all fours, and will wear little or no clothing. A doctor who has seen him says that his head is small, his brow uncommonly low and contracted, while his eyes are gray, restless and squinting. He has a small, wrinkled face, on which are scars—marks, doubtless, of severe bites received from animals. He stands about five feet two inches in height and is partially covered with thick hair. He has never been able to tell his story, so his birth and his life among the wolves remain a mystery."

When Willie Went Walnutting.

Wisconsin's wild winds were whistling when Willie Wade went walnuting. Warmly wrapped was Willie, with woolen wrapper, wadded waistcoat with wristlets.

Winnie Wade wondered why Willie wouldn't wait warmer weather, when Winnie would walnut with Willie.

Willie wandered where Walter West was wheeling wood, with wonderful wheelbarrow, wishing Walter would walnut.

Without wasting words, Walter whistled, "Whew! walnuts will wait; while wood won't."

Where walnut woods were, woodmen were working with wabbly-wheeled wagon, with worn, weary, wretched work-horse, which was wasted with weakness, which was well worn-out with work.

Woodman Wheeler waggishly wrenched Willie's water-pail, whereupon water wet Willie's winkers; Willie wept woefully.

Woodman was worried. "Why weep, Willie? Weak women weep with wee woes. Whistle, Willie!"

When winkers were wiped Woodman Wheeler went with Willie where walnuts were. Willie's wooden water-pail was well-filled, while wee wrens warbled, wood-pigeons whizzed.

Willie warily watched while Woodman waged war with wasps—which wasn't wise. Wasps were waxing warmer, whereupon Willie, with water-pail, went where Widow Walman, Winnie's washerwoman, was, who well-washed woolens with warm water, with washing-machine, wringing with wringer.

Willie went within wash-room, where Widow Walman welcomed Willie with warm wheat waffles, with wholesome whortle-berries washed well with water.

When well warmed Willie wandered where water was, willows waved, where, when weather was warmer, white waxen water-lilies were witnessed.

Willie waded where web-footed water-fowl was; water-fowl wouldn't wait Willie's welcome.

Winnie was window watching, wondering where Willie was, whereupon weary Willie, with well-filled water-pail, was witnessed.

Winnie warmly welcomed Willie.

When woods whiten with winter, when windows wear wonderful white-frost works, Winnie, with Willie, will welcome walnuts, will want warm walnut-cake.—Youth's Companion.

Humming-Bird's Umbrella.

A writer in the American Sportsman tells a remarkable story about a humming-bird:

In front of a window where I worked last summer was a butternut-tree. A humming-bird built her nest on a limb that grew near the window, and we had an opportunity to watch her closely. In fact, we could look right into the nest.

One day, when there was a heavy shower coming up, we thought we would see if she covered her young during the rain. Well, when the first drops fell, she came and took in her bill one of two or three large leaves growing close by, and laid this leaf over the nest so as completely to cover it; then she flew away.

On examining the leaf, we found a hole in it, and in the side of the nest was a small stick that the leaf was fastened to, or hooked upon. After the storm was over, the old bird came back and unhooked the leaf, and the nest was perfectly dry.

D. R. McLaren came down from Bishop Thursday.

Quite a number of our townspeople are on the sick list.

James Jones was a visitor at Independence on Monday last.

Charles Levy, formerly of this town, has returned after an absence of nine years.

Mrs. M. Goodale and son, Volney, came down from Fish Springs early in the week.

S. G. Sneden, Esq., came down from Bishop Wednesday on business in the Superior Court.

John Kelly, a mining expert from Bodie, paid Independence a short visit during the week.

Dr. J. S. McQueen expects to return home in a couple of days. Get your teeth fixed immmediately.

LOST.—On December 31st a long gray overcoat. Finder will please return to this office and receive $5 reward.

Gustave Sanger, Will Sanger and Joe Danielson came down from Big Pine Wednesday evening last returning next morning.

Copper mines are daily growing in demand. Stocks of metallic copper are steadily decreasing and the demand is in excess of the supply.

Scott Broler and Jack Welsh came dawn from Fish Springs Hill on Monday last. They report the mining interest in that section as improving.

Arizona has a good mining law which will not allow the relocating of claims to avoid assessment work and compels locators to do development work.

J. W. Murphy and Lester Laird returned from Salt Wells Valley on Tuesday last. They report heavy storms in that section during the last fortnight.

I. H. Mulholland started for Los Angeles last Sunday with his young stallion, Osito. The horse will be put in training at once for the next summer races.

Dr. Woodin informs us that there is quite a number of cases of la grippe and pneumonia in Lone Pine. Mrs. McKenzie, Mrs. Burckhardt and Mrs. Lucas are all quite ill.

Mr. Stafford, who has been inspecting the mining interests in this section for the past four months, left for the lower country on Monday. He will return in about a month.

There will be no religious services here next Sunday as the Rev. T. H. Nicholas goes to Bishop to fill the appointments of Rev. W. F. McClure, who is at present visiting in the southern part of the State.

On January 12th the State Board of Pardons, of Nevada, pardoned Alice M. Hartley, who was sentenced to eleven years in prison for the killing of Senator Foley in Reno nearly two years ago.

It is reported that a syndicate has made an offer for the numerous mining claims on Fish Springs Hill. If the sale is consummated, the work of developing these properties will soon commence and be carried on with all the vigor that capital and labor can command.

Ed. and Jim Yerington and Henry Daughty were down from Carson last week on a hunting trip. Their car was side tracked at Tibbetts station and the gentlemen worked the country around Aberdeen for game. It is reported that they met with fair success.

From a letter we learn that Clifford Baxter, son of John Baxter of this place, who is attending school in Oakland, in a recent examination made a most creditable showing, having received over 85 per cent in each of his studies. Clifford will enter the State University at Berkeley at commencement of the next school year.

Persons who are troubled with indigestion will be interested in the experience of Wm. H. Penn, chief clerk in the railway mail service at Des Moines, Iowa, who writes: "It gives me pleasure to testify to the merits of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. For two years I have suffered from indigestion, and am subject to frequent severe attacks of pain in the stomach and bowels. One or two doses of this remedy never fails to give perfect relief." Price 25 and 50 cents; sold by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

The Reward G. M. Co.

On Sunday last three of our leading ladies, Mrs. F. Rhine, Mrs. J. C. Irwin and Mrs. J. J. Gunn paid a visit to Supt. Hoskins and the Reward Mine and mill. In the afternoon the party was joined by Mrs. McIver, and all four ladies, accompanied by Supt. Hoskins, started to visit the mine. The climb up the mountain, as every one knows who has tried it, is no small undertaking, and when handicapped by a considerable avoirdupois makes it all the more difficult. The mine, however was reached in due season and the lady experts, after examining the ledge and workings, assure us that the mine is a success. Considerable interest was manifested in the workings of the underground engine, which was ably explained to the visitors by that prince of engineers, Mr. Harvey Edgerton. The mill and assay office were given much attention and interest, and judging from the menu for dinner, breakfast and supper the boarding house was not overlooked. The evening was spent by the visitors in playing whist, but of the victors we have heard nothing probably they fell into the mill race. The ladies join in saying that the gentlemen at the mill were most hospitable, and in fact, could give some of our town folks, both ladies and gentlemen, a few lessons in the art of entertaining. The entire visit was a pleasure from start to finish. On the return trip Monday morning the ladies were accompanied by Mr. Berrich, who brought with him bar No. 26 the result of the last clean-up, which, according to assay, is the best one yet. The mine is looking very promising and there is at present sufficient ore in sight to keep the mill going a year at least. Supt. Hoskins is to be congratulated on having made the first thorough mining success in Inyo in many years, and we hope his example will soon be followed by others. The shipments from the Reward for the year 1896, not including bar No. 26 or concentrates, will reach over $20,000, adding to this about $12,000 for concentrates brings the entire output to about $32,000 for the year 1896.

'Rah For The Holiday.

Frequent holidays are things for which every citizen should be thankful. Holidays give to people a chance to breathe, they compel the banks to cease from banking, the insurance companies from insuring, the mercantile classes from mercantiling, the lawyers from lawing, and, while they do not stop the tax eaters from eating—official salaries go merrily on, no matter what happens—they give the overworked employes of the Government a needed rest. The Post is in favor of needed holidays. We now have fifty-two holidays every year on Sundays and about a dozen other days set by law for rest. A bill is pending before the Legistature to make St. Patrick's day a legal holiday. We are in favor of the bill.

Last night Governor Budd sprung, as the law permits him to do, a legal holiday upon the State. The occasion is not a dog fight or a boxing match, but Mr. Huntington's celebrated victory over the funding bill in Congress. There is loud complaint among the business classes of this city to-day at the precipitate manner in which the Governor has sought to close the banks and interfere with trade. But we have no sympathy whatever with these business classes. Governor Budd and the Examiner are running the State, and if they want holidays three times a week they should be permitted to have them. In fact, we are in favor of having a holiday declared every time our esteemed contemporary gets a new subscriber. —S. F. Post.

Wool.

Dullness is still being experienced in the wool market, which is to be expected at this time of year. From the middle of December to the middle of January is invariably a lifeless period in the wool trade. There is more wool on hand than a year ago, despite the fact that the last clip was lighter than that of the preceding year. Holders, as a rule, are contending for full current quotations or more. Especially is this the case with fleeces showing generally good condition. It is expected that at the coming session of Congress a tariff will be placed on foreign wools, shortly after which a renewal of activity and firmness may be looked for in the market for the home product.

Voted for Perkins.

Our Assemblyman, Dr. Keables, voted for Perkins for U. S. Senator. He ran as an Independent Silver candidate, and while he was endorsed and supported by the Democrats of Inyo, who had no candidate, he claims that they had no claims on him, that he should vote against Perkins and contrary to his old time Republican principles. The Doctor has already made a host of friends in the Assembly. He has been placed on the following Committees: Chairman of Public Health and Quarantine Committee, County and Township Governments, Crimes and Punishments, Swamp Lands and River Improvements.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump, will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited,

C. A. WALTER,
Independence, Cal.

He Stole a Kiss.

William Roe of Cloverdale is probably the first person in California to enjoy the distinction of being committed to jail for the offense of kissing. Roe was arrested on Christmas night for throwing his arms around a young lady who was on her way to a masquerade ball and kissing her. He was sentenced to sixty days in the county jail.—Ex.

Sheriff Given returned from Sacramento on Wednesday evening last.

RANDSBURG.

A correspondent of the Los Angeles Express of January 12th, says: The long trail of people going to the bonanza town of the desert still continues. Mojave, the junction place, is doing an immense business, and, stop-over houses are going in all directions. J. H. Tolfree is doing an immense business. In Randsburg the building boom is unabated. Houses and stores are going up in all directions and a big hotel is being constructed on Butte avenue. It will have fourteen sleeping rooms besides an elaborate dining room so far as Randsburg is concerned. Building projects of all kinds are on tap and there will soon be accommodations for all, provided the rush does not increase, as it threatens to do.

The Randsburg Gold Mining, Milling and Water Supply Company is the newest company. Shares are to be listed at 12½ cents, non-assessable. The mines are what is known as the Burcham group, the Val Verde being the principal one and the one on which the most work has been done. There is a shaft on this latter sixty-five feet deep and the vein has widened from three and a half to seven feet in that distance, the ore running from $24 to $30 per ton in free gold besides sulphurets. The company proposes to erect its mill on the mines which are located on section 25, just north of Randsburg about a mile. It also proposes to bring the water from Cuddeback Lake where it will bore two wells to a depth of 500 feet if necessary. The names of the incorporators are F. M. Kelsey and F. P. Flint of Los Angeles, J. W. Pender, a mining engineer; C. A. Burcham, superintendent of the Rand group, and G. W. Glover of the Randsburg mines.

There was a prize fight at the White Wings saloon last Sunday between "Kid" Sullivan of Arizona and Billy Wilson of Omaha and young Green of San Francisco. Sullivan could not knock out Wilson, but fully punished Green.

Paying ore a little south of Johannesburg has been discoveeed, By the way, many lots have been disposed of in this new locality.

Improvements are constantly being made. A daily mail service is promised. An attempt is being made to secure an express service.

A better stage service will be put on in a few days. Shippee & Rice will continue their line by way of Koehn Springs and Garlock, carrying the mail and passengers, but will withdraw their coaches on the other line to Mojave. Mr. Williams will put on new six-horse Concord coaches, making one change on the way. The first coach will leave Randsburg at 7:30 a. m., connecting at Mojave with the freight train going south on the Southern Pacific road at 1 p. m., arriving in Los Angeles the same evening. The second coach will leave Randsburg at 12:30 p. m., and connect with the evening train going north at 7:05 p. m.

The Southern Pacific will have a freight and passenger man here on Thursday of this week and tickets will be sold through when desired.

Rain is not a welcome visitor here because people are not prepared for it. It rained very hard here yesterday and is drizzling to-day. The saloons and hotels are filled with steaming men and women

Burning Sands.

A lurid description of a section in California is given by a traveler,, though without vouching for its unexaggerated truth:

A queer region is Death Valley, and the discriminating Forty-Niners, who had a nice sense of the fitness of names, made no mistake in christening the sink of the Amargosa river. The valley is in the county of Inyo, between the Panamint mountains and the Amargosa range, and it is true that the Amargosa river is swallowed up and forever lost frem sight. In the deepest part the bed lies 150 feet below sea level, and the rocky walls on either side rise 1,500 feet above its level. The entire valley is a desert, the air excessively dry and suffocatingly hot. No man has ever explored its area for the reason that it is impossible to sustain life long enough to traverse its awful waste, which is eight miles wide and forty miles long. The air is poisonous as well as intensely hot, the thermometer exposed to its influence often showing a temperature of 125 degrees. It was while attempting an exploration of this valley that the narrator and party were showered by boiling water and escaped scalding only by getting under close camp cover. Death Valley is one of the best places in the world to avoid and it difficult to surmise what reward even the most adventurous explorer could hope for in getting upon its cruel sands. It is presumed that the valley is of volcanic origin and that unextinguished subterranean fires render it so fatal to man and beast.—Ex.

Notwithstanding the narrator's experience, men have gone from here to that Inferno with only one canteen of water to quench thirst and they didn't have to stand on their heads too keep from burning their feet, either.

Last Monday while John Keegan loaded his big wagon a bunch of young pigs, belonging to O. I. Mairs, ran about the horses heels and frightened them so badly that they ran away. They ran the wagon into a tree, breaking away and causing considerable damage. The pigs are a nuisance and had there been any one in the wagon at the time might have caused a much worse accident. They should be penned at once or they are likely to cost the owner far more than their worth.

For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

ATTEMPT AT BUYING LAND.

It Requires Tact to Buy Timber Land In the Mountains.

It requires time and tact to buy mountain land. The following is a typical experience:

"I was riding along Tug river, in Kentucky, when I saw a tract of land upon which I concluded it would pay to erect a small sawmill. I hunted up the owner, finding him seated on a log fishing.

"'Do you own this land?'

"'Sh', stranger! Fust bite I've hed,' he answered in a stage whisper. In about a minute he caught a fish, and I repeated my question.

"'Got any baccer?' he asked. I gave him a chew, and in a few minutes he said, 'Which land?'

"'That land along the road for a mile back.'

"'Yaas.'

"'How much have you?'

"'Whar you frum?'

"'Chicago. How much land have you?'

"'Five thousand acres.'

"'What do you ask for it?'

"'Waal, it's worth $20 an acre, but fer cash I'll swap fer $10 an acre. Kain't talk 'bout it now. Hev ter ketch fish fer supper.'

"I sat on a log beside him for three hours, neither of us saying a word, until he arose and started home, while I mounted my horse and followed.

"That night I got as far as to see his deed for the land and get a description.

"'It may be a little short,' he said, 'an I reckon I'd take $40 fer it without surveyin.'

"No inducement would move him from that figure, so I went on to the next tract, which I did not want, the timber being too thin.

"'How much does Phillips want for his land?' I asked.

"'Thousan dollars.'

"'Can you buy it for me?'

"'How much is there of it?'

"'A thousand acres.'

"'I reckon.'

"Two weeks later I received a deed, paid $1,000, and when surveyed the tract measured 980 acres."—Washington Star.

CARLYLE AND THE CABBY.

How the Latter Lost the Trade of the Great Philosopher.

Carlyle was well known to London cabmen. For years he engaged a particular driver from the rank and refused to have any other. This man, however, lost his custom in a somewhat peculiar manner.

Some medical students got to know of his preference for the driver, and, getting hold of the driver one day, they inquired if he knew who his fare was, when he told them he did not. The students informed him that he was one of the most famous and eccentric writers of the day, and, giving him a book, advised him to appear to be reading it whenever Carlyle approached the stand.

Cabby, without any suspicion, acted on their advice, and when the old sage next came for a cab he seemed deeply impressed in a very pretentious book.

"Hello! Wha's that you're readin?" inquired the Ecclefechan philosopher.

"A most hout an hout, tiptop, splendid book about that 'ere French revolution," was cabby's gushing reply.

"Eh, what dae ye say? Let me see it," said Carlyle, holding out his hand.

"Oh, certainly, sir," said the driver, handing him a copy of his "History of the French Revolution."

"Weel, my man," inquired the sage, apparently delighted, "are ye sure that you're readin this work intelligently?"

"Perfectly sure," said the jehu confidently. Then, thinking he ought to say something in praise of the book, he added, "Why, sir, it's almost as good as 'The Newgate Calendar!'"

The grim old Dumfriesian glared at him, grunted out something, turned abruptly around and engaged the next cab. From that day Carlyle never looked at him, but stuck to the second man, who happened to have had the honor of driving most of the distinguished men of the century.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

A Little Girl's Riddle.

Several children were asking riddles the other day, and a bright little girl who listened got the idea of what a riddle was. The next day she went to her father and said, "There was a blind and curtains on a pole and the pole fell and two men laughed." The father promptly gave it up when she said, "Don't you see the point?" Upon being answered in the negative she puzzled her brains for awhile, and said, "Neither do I." She is now practicing on riddles that have some meaning in them.

Two Readings.

"Husband, what did the doctor say about me?"

"He said that you must give up religion and take to drink."

"What!"

"Well, he said you must stop doing so much church work and take a tonic."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

FREE SILVER.

The coinage of silver might have been too free, but the free use of it in a small sum may be a very big investment with very sure and large profits. What it costs to buy a bottle of St. Jacob's Oil for the cure of rheumatism is within the reach of the poorest. It is the best investment in this line—best cure, and the profits are sure, because it will surely cure. This is so well known it is almost a maxim, and so much good is wrought out of the free use of so little that a strong, active workman can be made out of a man who before may have been a helpless invalid or a hobbling cripple.

I believe my prompt use of Piso's Cure prevented quick consumption.—Mrs. Lucy Wallace, Marquette, Kans., Dec. 12, '95.

The Clown and the Missionary.

By VIOLA ROSEBORO.

It seemed that it took three or four people in this case to make one Good Samaritan. It happened, as it is always happening in this fantastic life, that though I wished to ask the missionary about his interview with Teddy Catty, and had, of course, rational human motives for such an interest in the lad, one puerile triviality after another preoccupied me, so that I had just a word with him before the ship's company parted at Liverpool.

He pointed out the picture.

We were in the custom house. The missionary's wife, thin, pale, shabby, quietly executive and a lady, kept order among her children in a corner of the great, bare, overlighted, ugly place, and beside her sat Teddy Catty, with his hat pulled over his eyes.

I felt that I could not speak to him there. To do so would, it seemed, emphasize the cruel, bold publicity of the place. So I went to where the missionary stood over his bags and boxes, a queer lot, and asked him, if the worthlessness of the words did not choke him, to tell the boy goodby for us and to say that we felt for him. I stopped short, shamed with the thought of how little we felt, realizing for once not only the powerlessness of human sympathy, but its painfully absurd deficiency in quantity, the unnecessary thickness of our wadding of stupidity. Then I reflected as I stood there that this whole little episode of our acquaintance with the missionary and the clown, so slight, yet so dyed in the primary colors of life, its grotesqueness and comedy and inconsequence, its mystery and tragedy, was ending, or rather, as is the way of life, fading, passing, like a cloud, into something else, and that soon the quaint pair would exist for me no more, and I rebelled against the mutability of existence. I said to the missionary: "I shall be in London in a week or two. I don't suppose I'll ever be the least good to you or to Teddy Catty, and there is no reason in keeping up such an acquaintance as ours, but for no smaller reason than that we are all human beings"— The missionary's eyes responded so adequately with humor and a good deal beside that for a moment it did not occur to me to finish my sentence, and then I concluded: "Let me come to see you or your wife a moment to hear how things are. You'll probably know something of Teddy Catty for as much as a fortnight longer."

Yes, he thought his friendship with the clown might survive all devouring time so long, and he said he would be glad to see me again.

Yet I had been in London a week and had not looked up my fellow passengers, when one day as Amy and I were going through the amazingly crowded rooms of the Royal academy whom should we see but the little clown. He was sitting on one of the divans, dressed in the conventional mourning of a law loving Englishman, a frock coat and crape banded silk hat dignifying Teddy Catty's little figure. We saw him furtively wipe his eyes as he gazed at the gilt and canvas covered wall before him, and we knew Emmy's picture was there. We soon found it. It was a little one, hung rather high, and like several thousand others in that home of English art it was of a baby, and, again like the majority of them, it was a poor picture—dull, conventional. Whatever had been in poor Emmy's heart when she painted it was concealed under a false, frigid method faithfully carried out.

Teddy's face worked convulsively for a moment when he saw us. Then he pointed out the picture and gave us his place to sit in while we gazed. There was plainly no need of talking about it. He did not think of comment as becoming the occasion.

"It belonged to one of the dressers at the theater," he said softly after a time. "She had a lot of children, and her husband died, and—Emmy—Emmy helped her, and she was tremendously fond of that baby. She used to keep it at the house days and days to get chances to paint it." Teddy's voice failed him again.

After awhile in the moving of the throng he got a seat beside us, and I noted, as if it were something surprising, that in taking it he arranged his coattails with the same odd funniness of movement as of old. It did seem quite strange for a moment that his grief had not lifted him into ideal grace. He looked from one to the other of us and said: "I was going to try some way to see you ladies, but the missionary said you were going to come to see him. I wanted to tell you that I'm going back with him to China, and I'd never have known him if it hadn't been for you."

"Going with him?"

"Yes, Miss Milman. I'm going to see if I can help him—help him be a missionary, you know." Teddy's unfamiliarity with the phrases of the "work" pleased my ear. "I've got a little money," he went on, "and I feel as if I'd like to do something—something religious—some time, and it seems as if this was my chance. I fancy Emmy would like it. But I never could turn in with church or chapel people here at home. I know I couldn't. They think a circus man ought to repent a lot, you know, and that I ought to throw over the show business for good, and I don't see how I can, and I don't know that I want to. Long as Emmy didn't cut it altogether I don't know as I want to."

"But—what—how are you going to manage out in China?"

"Why, you know, the missionary's different from most religious folks. He just takes things naturally, and I've some money by me, and Emmy left me a little"— He stopped a moment and stared fixedly into space, then shifting his position a little went on in a different tone: "I can go out there, and then he says he can give me things to do for him as a lay worker—that's what he calls it—and that I can be some use to him, and that it'll be easier for me to be in good standing there than here. I don't care how it is, but I'd like to stay with him awhile and do something some way for religion, you know—the real thing. Yes," in answer to a question, "I suppose I'll come back and go in the circus after my money's all gone. They'd never want to support me as if I was a real missionary. I wouldn't be worth it, but they'll let me be a Christian there."

We shook hands with Teddy Catty at the door of Burlington House, and I saw him no more, but when I called on the missionary he confirmed the story of these queer plans.

"Yes," he said, "Teddy seems so little capable of the ordinary ways of entering into and feeling about the religious life that I don't know what channel of usefulness would be open to him here. He wants to come with me, and it seems to me it is a good step. Things are simpler out there. About his coming back—I don't think he'll come back. I think in time he can be taken fully into the work. If he does return, why, he'll have a fuller religious experience than he has now to fall back on."

And so, thanks somewhat to two modern young women professing grave philosophical doubts of the wisdom of foreign missions, this curious transaction came actually to pass, and the only circus clown I ever knew, without renouncing what I shall call his art, sailed away to China as a Christian missionary.

No philosophical doubts could stop us from bidding him godspeed, nor have they quenched since that day a high degree of interest in Chinese missions.

Teddy Catty has not yet returned. We feel it would be piquant to see him again fill his place in the ring, but withal other than artistic sentiments will make us contented if the missionary's predictions come true, and the circus knows him no more.

THE END.

STEALING INVENTIONS.

Few Men of Genius Reap the Benefit of Their Ingenuity.

Just why inventive genius and gullibility should go together it is hard to say. Certain it is that inventors are the most guileless individuals in their dealings with others on business matters and fall easy victims to the spiders who lie in wait for such flies. The list of clever men who walk today while those who ride owe their luxury to the other man's genius and their own shrewdness is an interesting one. Here are a few cases picked haphazard from the chronicle of inventions that failed to benefit the inventor, or, at least, produced for him a little of what was his due.

It is not necessary to be very old to remember when hooks were first put in men's shoes in place of holes in order to save time in lacing the shoe at the top. This was the brilliant idea of an inventor to whom it should have brought a fortune. It would have done so had he been a shrewd business man. Being merely an inventor, he hadn't sense enough to keep his idea to himself until the patent office padlock had secured it against theft. In the innocence of his nature the inventor confided the idea to a friend while crossing the North river ferryboat, and the friend hardly waited for the boat to tie up in Jersey City before he excused himself, started back to New York and went on a dead run for a patent lawyer in order to have the idea secured for his own especial benefit. Another man is known today as the inventor of the lace hooks. He owns a splendid house and is wealthy. The confiding inventor got nothing.

The inventor of a patent stopper for beer bottles, something that had long been wanted by the trade, sold the invention for $10,000 to a man who recognized its money making value. The purchaser is now worth $5,000,000, all of which he made from the patent stopper. Out of the goodness of his heart he presented the original owner of the patent with $30,000, so that this man got $40,000 in all for his $5,000,000 idea. To give some notion of the value of patent rights on this bottle stopper the price came down from $1 to 6 and 7 cents a gross, and even at this enormous reduction a good profit can be made.

This last inventor was treated with princely generosity, however, in comparison with the genius who devised a pocketbook clasp in the shape of interlocking horns with balls at the end which snapped shut with a single pressure. The idea was afterward applied to gloves and became very much in favor. The inventor relinquished his prize for the magnificent reward of a kidney stew dinner and 50 cents, the latter having been advanced by the purchaser to pay the inventor's expense from Newark to New York. The man who secured the idea and patented it after treating the inventor in the royal manner mentioned made a big fortune by his shrewdness. What became of the inventor is not known.—Exchange.

Unpleasant Remedy.

A writer on lion hunting tells how Hassan, a quick witted Somali, found his way out of a very serious difficulty. He had been down in the waterless plains and was on the way home, driving some camels before him. It was a very dry year, and, although this was the rainy season, he had been unable to find any water to give his pony.

The result was that, having been ridden hard for two or three days, with little or no water to drink, the pony succumbed entirely and at last lay down about 20 miles from the wells. No amount of persuasion, or even beating, would get the creature on its legs again.

Hassan was in despair. He knew that there were no vessels at the wells in which he might carry water back to the pony, and it seemed to him as if nothing could be done to save it. At last he thought of a plan. He drove the camels at top speed to the wells, gave them as much water as they could drink and then hurried them on again.

He found the pony where he had left it, growing rapidly weaker. He immediately killed the camels, cut them open and took the water from their stomachs. The pony was eager enough to drink it, and after the draft it revived sufficiently to struggle on to the wells.

In a few days it had completely recovered. In telling the story Hassan always added that he could get plenty of camels, and whether that were so or not he would rather have cut the throats of 100 than sacrifice his beloved pony.

Frederick Moncrieff has written a historical romance called "The Provost-Marshal."

Andrew Lang's long-heralded "Pickle, the Spy," dealing with a romance of King Charles, the Stuart pretender, is on the point of appearance.

The Macmillan Company is issuing an edition of Irving's "Alhambra," illustrated wth numerous lithographs by Joseph Pennell, which have drawn out a note of praise from Whistler.

Jules Verne is cheerily turning out his seventy-sixth novel. To novels a year are his ambition, and he has realized it regularly since 1858. He is a hard critic of his own work, and rewrites his stories at least half a dozen times.

The relations between Alfred de Musset and George Sands are the subject of animated discussion in the French press. Paul Marieton is treating the subject in an exhaustive volume, soon to appear under the title "Une Histoire d'Amour."

Hall Caine calls his new story "The Christian," which is in line with his regular titles. Every book that he has written is "the" something: "The Deemster," "The Bondman," "The Scapegoat," "The Manxman," and now "The Christian."

The London Chronicle has printed several pages of interesting illustrated matter from the pen of Nansen, describing his arctic experiences. That paper is authority for the statement that Dr. Nansen will receive nearly $125,000 for the whole rights of his arctic book. There will be Norweglan, French, and German editions, besides the English and American.

It is now definitely stated that the executors of William Morris will close the Kelmscott Press as soon as the works already in hand are completed. The last book to be issued from the famous press will be "The Sundering Flood," a short tale, which Morris finished a few weeks before his death. Aymer Vallance, a well-known disciple of Morris, has in preparation a work on his master, which will be an elaborate survey of his work as "an industrial and decorative artist, preserver (as distinguished from 'restorer') of ancient monuments, and general worker in the aesthetic movement of the day."

Inventor of Matches.

France, says the London Chronicle, is about to honor with a statue the man who did not invent lucifer matches. In 1830, it seems, M. Nicolet, professor of chemistry at Dole, in the Jura, was illustrating before his class the explosive properties of chlorate of potash, when it struck one of his pupils, Charles Sauria by name, that a combination of phosphorus with the detonating chemical might furnish a far more satisfactory means of kindling a fire than the old flint and steel. He set to work upon the problem, and his experiments and those of his friends were attended with success. A year or two afterward M. Nicolet visited Austria, and gave the discovery away to German manufacturers. Without wishing to rob M. Sauria of the posthumous glory which appears to be the only reward of his ingenuity, patriotism compels us to claim the merit of being the real inventor for one of our own nation. Mr. Walker, of Stockton, by the use of chlorate of potash and sulphide of antimony, was making friction matches as early as 1829. Young Sauria very likely never heard of his process, but the Germans certainly did, and it was from his original idea that their trade sprang up and fructified, until the composition of cheaper wood and labor and of improved machinery drove them out of the market.

At the Bank.

Every day the Bank of England issues an average of 60,000 fresh notes, none of which, should they be again deposited in the bank, are issued a second time.

If a man should draw out a dozen notes, and, walking across the floor, deposit them again, they would be instantly cancelled.

It is one of the rules of the bank that every note shall be received and cashed, no matter what its age.

One note is shown which was 111 years out before it came back to the bank. Another rule is that every note offered for payment shall be redeemed, even should it be known to have been stolen. This point was finally settled some years ago.

A clerk in London robbed his employer of $100,000 in notes on the Bank of England. He fled to Amsterdam and there gave the notes to a broker, who was an accomplice.

This man, in spite of the fact that the theft and the number of the notes had been widely published, appeared at the bank and demanded payment.

It was refused, when he declared the bank to be insolvent, as it had broken its ancient rule. He was bidden to come back to the cashier's office, where his claim and the question of the veracity of the bank were settled for all time.

Origin of Words.

"Oh, dear me!" is equivalent to "Oh, Dio mio," or "Oh, my God." Rotten row, the famous drive in London, was originally called la route du roi, or the King's passageway. "Pope" was originally "papa," and "czar" and "kaiser" are both Caesar. "Thimble" was originally "thumb-bell," as the thimble was first worn on the thumb. "Dandelion" was dent de leon, or the lion's tooth. Vinegar is taken from the French vin aigre, or sour wine. Dominie, the old name used for a preacher, is derived from Dominus. Lord in the old Anglo-Saxon was llaford, or loaf distributer. Sir was originally the Latin senior. Madam is "my lady." Slav was originally a person of noble lineage, not the slave as now applied.

FORTUNE SEEKING EMIGRANTS.

Many a poor family that seeks the western wilds in the hope of winning a fortune, is preserved from that insidious foe of the emigrant and frontiersman—chills and fever—by Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. So effectually does that incomparable medicinal defence fortify the system against the combined influence of a malarious atmosphere and miasma tainted water, that protected by it the pioneer, the miner or the tourist provided with it, may safely encounter the danger.

THE SEED IS THE VITAL THING.

Planting must be begun right, else no amount of cultivation or fertilizer can prevent the crop being a failure. The first step is the selection of seed. Do not take any risk here. Get seeds that you can depend upon—seeds that are fresh, that have a reputation behind them. The most reliable seeds grown in this country are Ferry's Seeds. Wherever seeds are sown the name of D. M. Ferry & Co., of Detroit, Mich., is a guarantee of quality and freshness. The greatest care and strictest caution are exercised in the growing, selection, packing and distribution of their seeds. Not only must they be fresh, but they must be true to name.

On a par with the quality of the seeds is Ferry's Seed Annual for 1897, the most comprehensive and valuable book of the kind ever printed. Every planter, large and small, should get, read and digest this book before planting a single seed. It is free to all who address the firm as above.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Eczema
All Her Life.

Mr. E. D. Jenkins, of Lithonia, Ga., says that his daughter, Ida, inherited a severe case of Eczema, which the usual mercury and potash remedies failed to relieve. Year by year she was treated with various medicines, external applications and internal remedies, without result. Her sufferings were intense, and her condition grew steadily worse. All the so-called blood remedies did not seem to reach the disease at all until S. S. S. was given, when an improvement was at once noticed. The medicine was continued with favorable results, and now she is cured sound and well, her skin is perfectly clear and pure and she has been saved from what threatened to blight her life forever.

S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) cures Eczema, Scrofula, Cancer, Rheumatism, or any other blood trouble.

It is a real blood remedy and always cures even after all else fails.

THE STRANGE GUEST.

He brought a branch of olive—
This stranger guest of mine;
Could I deny him entrance,
Who bore the peaceful sign?
Ah, no! I bade him welcome,
I set him meat and wine;
But while he drank and feasted,
How laughed his eyes divine!

I took the branch of olive
(The soothest plant that grows),
And from the carven ceiling
I hung it with the rose.
"But why to me this token,
Who never lacked repose?
Why this to me," I questioned,
"Who know no feud nor foes?"

He smiled beneath the olive—
This strangest stranger guest.
A branch from off the thorn-tree
Had told his errand best;
For since my house he entered
There's ne'er a heart at rest
To mock me with the olive!
But Love doth love his jest.

UNEXPECTED $10,000.

Willie Smith was 19—pretty, vivacious, ambitious, but just now the very much discouraged owner of the Smith plantation and its encumbrances. Two weeks before she had been summoned from her school at Staunton by the death of her grandfather, and, as there was no other relative, had entered at once into possession of the property. A few days after the funeral the owner of the mortgage had made an ostensible visit of condolence, but had so interpolated his expressions of sympathy with matters of practical significance that when he left Willie was for the first time aware that she was only the nominal owner of her plantation.

At first she was stunned, for she had already begun to make plans for the improvement and extension of the ancestral acres. The poor cabins of the negro tenants were to be replaced by new ones, neglected fields were to be again fenced and brought into cultivation, and better methods and better machinery were to be used. Her grandfather had been easy-going and impracticable, but she had supposed that her schooling and the house expenses had been met by the rents paid him by negro tenants. Now she knew that the mortgage had been gradually increased to meet the deficits.

This morning she was in the kitchen helping Aunt Chloe with the ironing, but her thoughts were busy with the formidable problems of the future. There were the expenses and the interest to be met, and, worst of all, there was $100 still due her school at Staunton. She could not see any possible way to pay it, for the season had been bad, and the renters, instead of paying what they owed, were beginning to clamor for advances on the next year's crops; and the creditor had delicately hinted that her grandfather had already raised the mortgage out of all proportion to its security. In anxious succession her mind went over her own accomplishments in search of something that would be money-producing. She was fond of scribbling, and was fairly good at drawing and music, and had won a school reputation as a linguist. But she was too honest and practical to overrate these accomplishments. They were good things to know, but would not help her at this crisis. No, she must struggle as best she could until the creditor foreclosed; then she would go out and seek a place among the wage earners.

"Heyer's yo' mail, Mis' Willie," called Uncle Tobe's voice through the open window, and a black hand was thrust in with a package of letters. She took them and glanced over the postmarks carelessly. Most of them were from school friends at Staunton. Several were circulars, and one was one from Leadville, Col. She selected this and examined it curiously. She had no correspondents in any part of the West.

Inside was a check and a short letter, with the printed address of a Leadville banking house. The letter read:

"Willie Smith, Talbottom, Ga.: We are requested to forward you the inclosed check for ten thousand dollars ($10,000). Please acknowledge receipt, and oblige, yours truly,

"WALDRON & CO."

She stared at it for a moment, then hurriedly examined the check. Yes, it was for $10,000, made in favor of Willie Smith. But, of course, it was a mistake. If she had any relatives in the world, they were so far removed as to have been overlooked, and certainly none of them was rich enough to send her $10,000.

Talbottom was a small, unprogressive town, whose straggling arms reached out drowsily to the line fence of the Smith plantation. Willie crossed two fields and went down a short lane, and was then in the principal street. There was but one bank, and its cashier was an old friend of her grandfather's. She went directly to him and explained her errand.

"I reckon it's all right, Willie," said the old man, after he had carefully examined the envelope and its contents. "It's directed to Willie Smith, Talbottom, and you're the only Willie Smith I know. And Waldron & Co. are all right. Our house has dealt with them. And I'm bound to say, my dear," putting down the papers and looking at her beamingly, "I'm plumb glad for this windfall. I can almost hear yo' grandfather chuckle in his grave."

"But it can't be mine," insisted Willie. "I don't even know that I have a relative in all the world."

"Somebody yo' family has lost sight of," said the cashier genially. "Now, there's a man over in Jasper County got a fortune from a cousin he hasn't heard from in thirty years. I reckon this is something that way. It's likely yo' mother's cousin or somebody else. Anyhow, it's all right, and I'm willing to take the check. Will you have the money, or leave it on deposit?"

"I wish I felt more sure," hesitated Willie.

"Well, suppose I telegraph to Waldron & Co. Can you come in again this afternoon?"

"Yes."

When she returned in the afternoon the cashier handed her a slip of paper. It read:

"Merchants' Bank, Talbottom, Ga.—Gentlemen: Nothing to explain. We forwarded check to Willie Smith, Talbottom, as requested. If the party presenting it can be identified you may cash same with perfect safety. Yours,

"WALDRON & CO."

"So you see it is all right," said the cashier. "Now, you will please indorse the check."

Willie did so with a sudden feeling of exultation.

"How will you have it?" briskly.

"Suppose you give me $6,000. That will pay off the mortgage and make some necessary repairs. The rest I will deposit with you. And—and suppose you let me have a check book; it will be more convenient."

The next few hours were momentous ones in the young girl's life. The mortgage was paid, and visits were made to grocery and harwware and seed stores, and to painters and carpenters and stone masons; and before she went home a check was on its way to the principal of her school at Staunton.

In the morning men came out and made estimates, and they were followed by painters and carpenters and laborers, who began to repair the old family mansion, and to surround the neglected fields with substantial fences, and to build new cabins under the magnificent live oaks that grew along one side of the plantation.

Willie spent most of her time outdoors watching the work and making occasional suggestions. The new cabins were surrounded by generous truck patches, and when they were finished she was careful to rent them only to industrious, reliable negroes. In this she was greatly assisted by the cashier, who came out frequently to watch the progress of the work and whose advice was always valuable.

One day a brisk, prepossessing young man stepped into the Talbottom postoffice.

"Any letters here for Willie Smith?" he asked.

"No, she called after them not an hour ago."

"She?" curiously.

"Yes. Generally her man Tobe gets them, but she happened to be in town this morning. You're one of the men working out there, I suppose?"

"No, not exactly."

He left the postoffice and walked across the street to the bank.

"Has Willie Smith presented a check here for $10,000 recently?" he asked.

"Miss Willie Smith has," replied the cashier.

"I beg your pardon, I meant Miss Willie Smith. You see, out West, we get in the habit of dropping ceremony."

The old cashier looked at him thoughtfully.

"So you are a Westerner, are you?" he asked.

"I was, but expect to be a Southerner now," said the young man frankly. "My mother left this country nearly thirty years ago, but I have often heard her describe her old home. When I made my pile I concluded to come down here and look around; and if I liked the place to stay permanently."

The cashier's face cleared instantly.

"Good!" he exclaimed. "You can't help liking such a grand country. All it lacks is money and energy. But what part of the West are you from?"

"Leadville, Col."

"Ah, I began to suspect it. You have been connected with the house of Waldron & Co., and called in to see if the check reached its destination all right." He came from behind the counter and took the young man's hand warmly. "I am right glad to see you, suh. Yo' house never sent out a better check than that in all its life. Miss Willie has paid off a mortgage on her plantation, and is making wonderful improvements, suh—wonderful! And do you know," lowering his voice, "if it hadn't been for that check I achally believe she'd been forced to go off and look for work—achally forced, suh."

"Indeed! That would have been too bad," said the young man, "but——"

"There's no but now," interrupted the cashier cheerfully. "Her future's as clear as a June sky. If I'd received the check myself I wouldn't have been half as much pleased. Miss Willie's a fine girl—a gem in a land that is full of jewels. You must excuse my enthusiasm, suh," apologetically, "but in a sort of way yo' house seems to have had a hand in the good fortune. But come into my private room and we'll talk over the country. You're to be one of us now, and maybe I can give you some points on buying a place. And I'll tell you about Miss Willie and her plans." Here a new thought seemed to strike him. "How'd you like to go out and see her yo'self?" he asked abruptly. "We close early, and I generally go that way for a walk. She'll be glad to see anyone from Waldron & Co."

"Nothing would please me better."

"Very well. You'll take dinner with me, and if I can be of any assistance in you' plans do not hesitate to use me. Now, there's the Calhoun plantation. Joins Miss Willie and just now can be had for a song. And, really, it's the best thing you can do in the whole country. But you haven't told me yo' name yet, suh!"

"Smith—er. Call me Hamilton Smith."

"A good name, suh—a good name. We have Smiths in every county in the South, but I tell them a good thing cannot be too common. My mother was a Smith."

He led the way into his private room and motioned the young man to an easy chair by an open window. Then he settled himself in an easy chair and gave a glowing picture of the Calhoun plantation.

The young man said little, but on his face was an expression of mingled amusement and indecision. And this amused indecision remained with him and even appeared in his voice until they went out to the Calhoun plantation. But when they returned, late in the evening, it had wholly disappeared.

"Miss Willie is an exceptionally fine girl," he said, with suppressed enthusiasm, "and if I am not mistaken the community will yet be proud of her plantation. She seems to have the faculty of knowing just what she wants and just how to go about doing it. I could not have planned the improvements better myself. Miss Willie told me she wanted to plant trees along her bank of the river, which runs between the two plantations, and that it would be nice if the owner on the other side could be induced to do the same. Are you sure the place can be bought?" abruptly.

"The Calhoun place? Certainly, and for a song."

"Well, I want it. I suppose it's too late to get it to-night," regretfully; "but if you'll arrange for its purchase early in the morning, so that the papers can be made out before noon, I'll be infinitely obliged. And I'll make it worth your while."

"But you haven't seen the place yet?" expostulated the cashier in amazement.

"Yes, I have—across the river, you know. Besides, I'm willing to take your word for it. If you can have everything settled before noon I will go over after dinner and talk with Miss Willie about the shade trees. And, do you know," with animation, "I've been thinking that those bluffs above the live oak grove will be a fine place to throw a bridge across the river. I wonder if Miss Willie will like the idea."

The next day the good people of Talbottom were stirred to unwonted excitement by the news that an energetic stranger had bought the old Judge Calhoun plantation, and that unlimited improvements were contemplated. And, even while this report was being circulated from mouth to mouth, it was followed by rumors of lavish contracts and engagements made with the townspeople of the town. Decidedly the stranger was no ordinary man.

And evidently Willie thought so, too, for she would flash covert, inquiring glances at him from under her long, dark eyelashes, and sometimes would listen with almost bated breath, wondering what daring scheme would be proposed next. He was so different from any man she had ever met—so energetic and impulsive and chivalrous. She could not help liking him, and she could not withstand his impetuosity any more than the reeds of the river could withstand the current in springtime. She offered objections to the building of the bridge and he overruled them in a single impetuous speech. She did not like the idea of assuming all the expenses of improving the river, but did not dare expostulate for fear of the quizzical look which she knew would come into his merry eyes. Inside of a month she began to feel that he was as much at home on her plantation as he was on his own, but she could see no way to prevent it.

And, indeed, she did not want to. In the fall their engagement was definitely announced, and all Talbottom said it was the most suitable match of the year.

A few weeks before the marriage he carefully overhauled his papers. There were many letters addressed simply to Willie Smith; some were to Willie H. Smith, and a few to William Hamilton Smith. All of them were destroyed.

"It isn't well to keep papers," he soliloquized, as the last one was reduced to ashes. "Some folks see them."

The Man and the Snake.

The reputed fascination of the serpent's eye is the motive of a story in Mr. Ambrose Bierce's volume of tales entitled "In the Midst of Life." Mr. Brayton was the guest of a friend, an eminent zoologist, whose specialty, of which he had a fine collection, was snakes. Stretched upon a sofa in his own room, Mr. Brayton glanced from the book he was carelessly scanning while awaiting the summons to dinner, and saw, in the shadow under his bed, two small points of light about an inch apart. He gave them no special thought and resumed his reading.

In a few minutes he gave an involuntary start, and stared into the obscurity under the bed. His gaze disclosed the coils of a large serpent; the points of light were its eyes, but were no longer merely luminous points; they looked into his own with a malign significance. Brayton was a brave man, but this seemed an occasion when discretion was the better part of valor. He would beat a retreat and backward, so as not to disturb the reptile; but instead of the movement his will had shaped, his right foot was placed in advance of his left.

The snake did not move, but its eyes seemed to become larger and more luminous. There were strange noises in Brayton's ears as, with reluctant steps, he could not refrain from drawing nearer the bed. Suddenly something struck him a hard blow upon the face. He had fallen to the floor.

The zoologist, startled by a terrific scream from above, rushed to his friend's room. There lay Brayton, senseless. As he bent over him he glanced under the bed.

"How did this thing get here?" he exclaimed, and pulling out the snake, flung it to the center of the room, where it lay without motion.

It was a stuffed snake; its eyes were two shoebuttons.

How time flies from the date on which a man distinguishes himself!

THE GOSPEL OF GRACE

EXPOUNDED BY OUR RELIGIOUS EDITOR.

How the First Methodist Episcopal Church in America Was Established—The Answers to Prayer—Some Suggestive Reflections Upon Home Life.

First American M. E. Church.

THE first Methodist church established in America celebrated its one hundred and twenty-eighth anniversary a short time ago. It is the old Methodist Church in John street, New York City. In the course of the celebration a curious history was reviewed.

FIRST METHODIST CHURCH IN AMERICA.

Mistress Barbara Heck, who had come to New York with a company of German and Irish immigrants, detected several men playing cards in her kitchen in 1766. She was righteously indignant, and seizing the cards she cast them into the fire. Then she sought out Philip Embury and begged him to call a meeting and preach the gospel to her unthinking neighbors.

In his house in Barracks street as a result of her appeal the first Methodist service was held in America. The house was too small to hold all those who wished to hear, and a sail loft in Cart and Horse street (now William) was hired. There each Sabbath morning at 6 o'clock the gospel was preached.

The growth of the congregation made still more room necessary, and two lots on Golden hill, "a rising ground near the borders of the city"—now John street—were purchased. Then the first Methodist Church was erected.

The worshipers did not call the edifice a church, but fitted it like a dwelling, because under the law of the British colony dissenters might not worship together in a church. It was dedicated on Oct. 30, 1768. A new building replaced it in 1818, and the present one was built in 1841.

A Defense of Prayer.

When, asks the critic, has there been witnessed an answer to prayer? When? Are the great religions of the world such insignificant and paltry phenomena that we may pass them by in this inquiry?

What power was it that overcame fear in the martyrs, or built the monasteries, or filled with courage and compassion the Vincents of Paul, or those who put an end to the slave trade, or the tender-hearted women that dedicate their lives on battlefields, in leper hospitals, amid scenes the most repugnant to flesh and blood? Unless we shut our eyes to these things, and ten thousand like them, we must acknowledge that prayer has done more than remove mountains. It has, I say, created civilization—not the steam engines and the stock exchange, indeed, which some would call by that abused name, but the human spirit of pity, self-control, justice, mercy and hope, whereby alone men have become godlike. No other force could have achieved this great and enduring miracle. For it was not secular knowledge, not the ardor of conquering barbarians, not even the graceful amenities of literature and social intercourse, but religion that gave us our present Gospel, which we allow to be true even when we break its commandments. And I ask, where would that religion have found a beginning, how could it flourish, during what time would it continue to survive, unless millions had believed in the power of prayer and thousands had practiced it?

Husbands and Wives.

It lies very much with the wives, Rev. F. B. Meyer says, to make it easy for their husbands to show them tenderness. A woman should have a clean face to start with. A little extra scrubbing with soap and water before the husband comes home at night would not be amiss in some cases that I have observed ,and might bring some roses to the cheeks. A bow in the hair, a clean frill round the neck, perhaps a flower in the dress, has an attractive effect. I tell the women that men's affections will sometimes wander because their wives are untidy and slatternly, their hair unkempt, their appearance unattractive. All women are not equally pretty, but it is not prettiness that holds a man's affection, but sweetness, neatness, nattiness, and these are possible to all women. A woman makes a profound mistake who frets and pouts and puts herself into a bad temper that she may be petted into a good one. It is a bad policy. A man will be tempted to coax her back once or twice, but he loses his respect for her each time. It really alienates him in his deepest nature, and brings division between them. She is no longer his equal, one with him in spirit, heart, and life, but his toy and plaything. After a while he will live in perpetual fear that one of these fits of caprice may be coming on, will hide anything likely to induce them, and so begins a course of insincerity which is the grave of love.

No, when a woman perceives the expression of tenderness waning, let her keep her secret. Like Enid, she must possess herself in patience. Never altering her own behavior, never less but more sensitive to every spoken and unspoken wish; light, gentle, sympathetic, patient; expressing her tenderness by those little arts that women learn without going to school, and the love will emerge from its winter, and sow the soil again with flowerets.

But let men be more thoughtful and tender. When they feel most put out and irritated, either with or without cause, it would be well to force themselves to bridge the yawning chasm by a caress. Kiss and be friends, they used to say, when we were children. Let us be careful to maintain the outward forms, and the inner spirit will not be far away. We should not be less courteous to our wives than to our friends. A wife's feelings are more susceptible. To leave the house for our daily work, or to return to it after hours of absence, without some recognition, is a mistake, and worse. Let us not forget the fret and worry, the perpetual burden of the children at home, the scheming and planning, the daily provision of dinner, the letting out of frocks for growing children, the darning and patching of boys' clothes, the tidying and cleaning and washing; and if there are servants the even greater anxiety involved in managing these. No woman would do for pay what thousands are doing for love. They ask no other wage than tenderness, which is the expression of a true and honest affection. And a woman can tell in an instant if it is that or a mere subterfuge for fidelity.
—The Watchman.

Good Night.

There is a tender sweetness about some of our common phrases of affectionate greeting, simple and unobtrusive as they are, which falls like dew upon the heart. Good night! The little one lisps it as, gowned in white, with shining face and hands, and prayers said, she toddles off to bed. Sisters and brothers exchange the wish; parents and children, friends and friends. Familiar use has robbed it of its significance to some of us; we repeat it automatically without much thought. But consider. We are, as voyagers, putting off from time to time upon an unexplored sea. Our barks of life set sail and go onward into the darkness and we, asleep on our pillows, take no such care as we do when awake and journeying by daylight. Of the perils of the night, whatever they may be, we take no heed. An unsleeping vigilance watches over us, it is the vigilance of One stronger and wiser than we, Who is the Eternal Good. Good and God spring from the same root, are the same meaning. "Good bye," is only "God be with you." "Good night," is really, "God night," or "God guard the night." It would be a churlish household in which these gentle forms of speech were ignored or did not exist. Alike the happy and the sorrowful, day by day, may say "Good night."

Be True.

Character is always known. Thefts never enrich; alms never impoverish; murder will speak out of stone walls. The least admixture of a lie, for example, the smallest mixture of vanity, the least attempt to make a good impression, a favorable appearance—will instantly vitiate the effect; but speak the truth, and all nature and all spirits help you with unexpected furtherance. Speak the truth, and all things are vouchers, and the very roots of the grass under ground there do seem to stir and move to bear you witness. See again the perfection of the law as it applies itself to the affections and becomes the law of society. As we are, so do we associate. The good, by affinity, seek the good; the vile, by affinity, the vile. Thus, of their volition, souls proceed into heaven—into hell. These facts have always suggested to man the sublime creed that the world is not the product of manifold power, but of one will, of one mind; and that one mind is everywhere, in each ray of the star, in each wavelet of the pool, active; and whatever opposes that will is everywhere balked and baffled, because things are made so and not otherwise.
—Emerson.

Bits of Things.

Who is a true man? He who does the truth, and never holds a principle on which he is not prepared in any hour to act and in any hour to risk the consequences of holding it.—Thomas Carlyle.

When the loving women reached the tomb, and looked, lo! the stone was rolled away; for it was very great. And the teaching for us? This—stones stones rolled away, obstacles vanquished for us in the presence of a sincere attempt.—Wayland Hoyt.

A man may know that he is without God if he is without prayer. Prayer is the simple expression of the desire for God. It is by prayer we invite God to come in to occupy his throne, and when he is in, prayer is inevitable.—James Stalker.

Happiness is a sunbeam which may pass through a thousand bosoms without losing a particle of its original ray; nay, when it strikes on a kindred heart, like the converged light on a mirror, it reflects itself with redoubled brightness. It is not perfected till it is shared.
—Jane Porter.

Good, steady work counts. High pressure activity makes the most fuss and show, but it is generally unreliable, spasmodic and liable to reactions. Rush, dash, impetuosity and excitement catch the eye, and are more boastful and pretentious, but the calm, persistent and onward movement insures the highest and best gains in the long run.—The Presbyterian.

Look after the football player, of course. The balloon man can wait."—Life.

"STAR ROUTE" DORSEY.

Now in California Trying to Recover His Lost Fortune.

Stephen W. Dorsey, once United States Senator from Arkansas, and noted for his connection with the great star route scandal many years ago, is now in southern California with a view to recovering his lost fortunes. Mr. Dorsey is interested in a mining property which, he believes, if properly worked, will pan out well. Dorsey was at one time one of the most prominent public men in the country. Before he was involved in the star route case and lost all his money he was said to have been a man that could make and unmake presidents. His first appearance on the political horizon was made in Arkansas after the war. A native of Vermont, he was 18 when the war broke out, and he served under Grant at Shiloh and took part in many of the big battles of the civil strife. When peace was restored he went to Arkansas and became a promoter of big enterprises. He organized a $1,000,000 cattle company in New Mexico and was in the very flush of his fortune when the storm of the star route scandal burst upon him and swept him off his feet. In defending himself in that celebrated case he spent all the wealth he had accumulated and emerged from the clouds of the storm wrecked in fortune and ruined in health. Of recent years he has made his home in Denver and has been casting about for means of rehabilitating himself. He has just been to London, where he secured capital enough to float his enterprise, and his prospects at the present time are bright. The mining property in which Dorsey is interested is located in Picacho, near Yuma. He will build a 100-stamp mill and a railroad to the Colorado river.

OVER 30 YEARS IN CONGRESS.

Holman, of Indiana, Returned After Two Years' Absence.

Among the Democratic veterans in congressional service, retired by the Republican landslide of two years ago, who are this year returned to the House is William S. Holman, of Indiana, the apostle of economy, who is familiarly known as "the watchdog of the treasury." Holman is often called the "great objector."

Born in a pioneer homestead in Indiana 74 years ago, he received a college education, taught school and then became a lawyer. In the 40's he was probate judge and a prosecuting attorney and the next decade went to the Legislature and was subsequently given a seat on the highest court in his State. In 1858 he was elected to Congress and was a member of the House from that time until 1895, with the exception of four years.

Only Lovesick.

It is not long since the emperor of Austria definitely settled the succession to the throne on his nephew, Archduke Otto, passing over the latter's elder brother, Francis Ferdinand, because he was on the point of death from consumption. Francis is apparently recovering his health, however, and it is hinted that he was not suffering so much from consumption as from blighted affection. He has long wished to marry the Archduchess Stephanie, the widow of Crown Prince Rudolph, whose tragic death at Meyerling a few years ago will be recalled, and he was constitutionally debarred from doing so while he remained in the direct line of succession to the throne.

Rainy Day Amusement.

Twigs and small branches may be made to look like coral and to be very ornamental. The process will help to amuse the young people on a rainy afternoon. Melt together four parts of yellow resin and one part of vermilion; dip the twigs into it, covering every part, and then let them dry without touching each other. A bunch of coral fastened to the corner of a picture frame, another branch coming from behind a picture and a bunch tied with a ribbon bow upon a scrap basket are all decorative.

Eloped With a Married Woman.

The following is taken from the S. F. Examiner of last Sunday:

A man by the name of Everett, who came to Randsburg some time ago with his wife, stated to-day that shortly after midnight yesterday his wife eloped from here with a young man named Edward Reddy. Everett did not seem much disturbed over the situation. He is a roughly-dressed fellow who has been working in the mines since coming here, while his wife is a handsome woman, who always dressed in fashionable attire and seemed to have plenty of money. She built a skating rink and owned other property.

Young Reddy became infatuated with Mrs. Everett, so the husband stated, and last night the two left here in a buggy for Mojave, but evidently changed their minds and went to Kramer, as up to a late hour this evening they had not reached the former place.

Edward Reddy went to Randsburg last November and has been working for the Randsburg Mining Company. Before he left this city he was employed by his uncle, Patrick Reddy, in his law offices. He also had charge of his uncle's mine in Darwin, Inyo county. He is the son of Edward Reddy, Superintendent of the Almshouse. Up to a late hour last evening the young gentleman's relatives in this city had not heard of the incident.

To Sail, If True!

In many towns in Northern California, during the past seven months, little Rosa Fletcher, aged 8 years, has been singing to the accompaniment of an accordion played by her mother. She sang a few nights lately in this City until the mother was informed that she was liable to be arrested for begging. Yesterday she told her story to Officer Holbrook of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

She said that her home is in Bishop, Inyo County. She went out there with her husband and five children to settle upon desert land which they took up. Her husband fell from a hay-wagon, injuring himself severely. They had no money, and the support of the family fell upon her alone. She conceived the idea that her little girl's voice might bring them in some money.

She went with the little girl to Sacramento, but she was ashamed to have her sing there. But she went to Ione, Amador City, Sutter Creek, Jackson, Angels Camp, Colusa, Bartlett Springs, Clear Lake, Cloverdale, Ukiah, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Eureka, Fort Bragg, Ferndale, Scotia, North Fork, Arcata, Crescent City and other towns, singing in the streets on boats and elsewhere. The girl's voice took well, and at 8 years of age she became the support of a family consisting of the father, mother and five children.

The mother economized and managed to live and in seven months sent $150 home to her husband at Bishop. But yesterday she was in a dilemma.

She dared not have her child sing in the streets here, for fear she would be arrested. She had not thought of this, but believed that she would be able to earn enough money here to take her home to Bishop, the amount being something like $35. She was nearly out of money, and saw no way to reach Bishop, which is about 300 miles from Reno.

"If they would let my little girl sing on the ferry-boats for a little while," she said, "perhaps I could raise the money I need in that way. I would be endlessly thankful if that could be brought about." S. F. Call.

Mrs. Fletcher has numerous relatives in this county who are very well to do, and we don't believe necessity is the cause for her child singing on the streets.

The Walker Lake Bulletin says: "A report is current that the Southern Pacific will build a branch line to Randsburg, and that the C. & C. will extend from Keeler, thus making a through connection. Superintendent Laws of the C. & C. informs us that at present there is no likelihood of such extension. If the mines stand the test of actual development, the roads will be put through, but not before.

Fong Ching, alias Little Pete, the brainy little celestial who has headed the Sam Yup company, was murdered in San Francisco last Saturday by Chinese highbinders. He was wealthy and the best known Chinaman in the State.

THE RANDSBURG BOOM

The following plain statement of facts in regard to the Randsburg District is taken from the Mining and Electrical Review:

The excitement consequent on the discovery of high grade ore in a few of the mines in Randsburg district has drawn thither hundreds of honest, adventurous and generally impecunious spirits, who are sanguine enough to perceive in every glowing newspaper article relative to new mining camps, a promise of immense wealth, with an assortment of gamblers, traders, speculators and a few capitalists.

No better service can be rendered the public, honest investors and the district itself, than by giving a clear and truthful statement of conditions as they are found to exist, and this the Review proposes doing. Heretofore we refrained from giving any information concerning the mines in the Randsburg district for the reason that reports from there were meagre and unreliable, and if published might be misleading. It is not only dangerous, but from a moral view-point, criminal to publish colored reports concerning a mining district which has not been yet practically tested.

The results of such boom notices, many of which doubtless are paid for by interested parties, are that unthinking men, with limited means, married or single, who regard as infallible all newspaper reports, particularly when they are vouched for by "our special correspondent," rush to the new camp to meet disappointment and misery, and that investors, more shrewd than those, regard with suspicion all camps which are thus boomed on paper without any authentic reports from a qualified examiner to back them.

Randsburg is, in one sense, a good prospective mining camp. A few of the mines which have been opened up have shown a quantity or ore, some of high grade. The best of these are the Olympus, the Rand and the Yellow Aster in the Rand group. The Butte, the Kinyon and the Wedge, in the Butte group, are being worked with success, and all show the existence of good ore in the district, but sufficient depth has not been attained to warrant a great future for the camp, the deepest shaft not being down more than 160 feet. Other prospects there are in the vicinity, but they can hardly be designated mines at this time. The outlook is good, and it is hoped and expected that another great mineral belt has been discovered. But development work must prove the existence of enough pay rock to satisfy the watchful eyes of investors, before timid capital will dare approach the desert claims.

Luther Wagoner, the noted mining engineer, who visited the Randsburg district recently, and from whose observations this article is compiled, gives it as his opinion that under present conditions there is but one practical way to bring the Randsburg properties into the market as legitimate propositions; the present owners must go down to a reasonable depth, and, while using the high grade ore to pay development expenses, pile the low grade until enough tonnage is in sight to warrant the building of a branch railroad to the mines.

The necessity of this will be apparent when the facts are considered. The only available water which might be pumped into the mines lies in a basin 1,000 feet below and this is seventeen miles distant, which would mean pumping that distance with a lift of 1,000 feet, and practical engineers know what expense that would entail. The nearest wood, which would of necessity be used in the mines, is fifty miles away. Water now costs 4 cents delivered. The expense of keeping a team is $120 per month. Meals are but 35 cents each. Whiskey is the cheapest article in the camp. There are about eight claims being worked, and not more than seventy-four men are at present employed in the mines.

It may be seen from all this, that Randsburg is not a poor man's camp, nor can fabulous prices be obtained for mere prospects.

If enough low grade ore is mined, as Mr. Wagoner suggests, a road can be built from Kramer to Randsburg, a distance of twenty-five miles, at a reasonable expenditure, as the grading would be comparatively easy. Then ore could be shipped to the main line at a cost of 75 cents per ton, and coal and water brought in at a low rate. Electricity might solve the power problem, but wood and water would still be absolute necessities.

Randsburg, no doubt, will be all right, but capital will not be forthcoming unless there is shown to be a basis for future returns from investments.

The progressive ladies of Westfield, Ind., issued a "Woman's Edition" of the Westfield News, bearing date of April 3, 1896. The paper is filled with matter of interest to women, and we notice the following from a correspondent, which the editors printed, realizing that it treats upon a matter of vital importance to their sex: "The best remedy for croup, colds and bronchitis that I have been able to find is Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. For family use it has no equal. I gladly recommend it." 25 and 50 cent bottles for sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

There are more men at work developing mining property in the Panamint, Argus and Slate range country than there has been for several years past.

Favor Division

An unusual condition of affairs obtains in Kern County. A large number of the leading citizens are not only willing to have their county severed in twain, but are really jubilant at the prospect of such a division and are ready to aid a bill in the State Legislature with that end in view. This position of the leading tax-payers of Kern is in striking contrast to that heretofore held by wealthy residents on the question of county division. There is a special reason for their change of attitude. They want to break loose from the new mining country about Randsburg. They see bankruptcy staring the county in the face unless something can be done. Bandsburg is 125 miles from the county seat, Bakersfield, and as the miners at the desert camp are very troublesome, five homicides having already occurred, the expense bills are growing so fast that to pay them means not a dollar for roads or other improvements. The fate of Trinity County is scaring the Kern people. The Littlefield murder case with the accompanying enormous expense for witnesses processes, etc., has left the mountain county not only without a dollar in the treasury but badly in debt. Either the same condition of affairs or else a huge tax rate confronts the Kern people, and that is why they are praying for the Randsburgites to form their own county. An insurmountable obstacle is at present in the way, for the constitution provides that no new county shall be formed with less than 5,000 inhabitants, and as there are between 3,000 and 4,000 only on the Rand, the only way to make up the deficiency would be to include a large quantity of farming land with its settlers, and these farmers the Kernites do not wish to lose. If the Randsburg boom keeps up it will be all right two years from now to go ahead and create a new county, but at present things will have to stay as they are.—Ex.

A NEGRO CAMP MEETING IN THE SUNNY SOUTH

PERHAPS there is no annual event looked forward to with greater pleasure than camp meeting time in the South, in which part of the country they are conducted on entirely original and unique plans, says a writer in the Globe-Democrat.

Those who have never attended one of these open-air meetings can form no idea of how they are carried on, and the many curious and peculiar things to be seen and heard. Camp meetings have been handed down from generation to generation, and may properly be called a Methodist invention. Camp meetings are sometimes regarded as sensational, but there can be no doubt that they do a world of good in redeeming and saving those hardened in sin. Whatever the merits of "city preaching," there is a distinctiveness about camp meeting services arising from the very nature of the case. They are a direct appeal to the popular heart, and derive no small measure of their inspiration and effectiveness not alone from the comparative informalities of the service, but from the hospitality which creates a community of good feeling amid parties present; the sense of worshiping in "the groves, which are God's first temples," operating in the meantime an abiding element of interest and devotion. Rightly considered, the camp meeting is the school of a host of virtues, and it is not too much to say that its history, though an old, old story, has never been adequately told.

To get squarely down to the enjoyment of camp meeting it is necessary to attend one held in the mountains of North Georgia or South Carolina. Those nearer the cities have too many frills to be really enjoyed. The tent holders are always hospitable and kind, and no one need go with a feeling of goneness in the gastric regions. And such eating! Fried yellow-leg chicken, big fat chicken pie, baked turkey and—everything good. To a hungry soul the invitation, "Turn up yer plate and help yerself," is generally accepted without further ceremony. The good people want you to eat, and eat plenty. This is always a part of the program that is seldom neglected.

THEY OCCASIONALLY GET WORKED UP TO A VERY HIGH PITCH.

Frequently some bold and daredevil mountaineer, without the love of the Lord or the fear of revenue officers in his heart, will open up a blind tiger a short distance from the ground, where mountain dew of illicit make is sold to his neighbors, or to any one else with the necessary price. Occasionally these blind tigers get their neighbors into trouble, but not often, as the mountain people have a way peculiarly their own of standing by each other in all matters relating to the liquor question. Many of them regard a little spirits as necessary, even at a camp meeting.

At a camp meeting in Lumpkin County a few years ago the writer heard a former dispenser of corn juice give his experience. He said:

"I came through just seven years ago, if I'm spared to see September comin', just erbout sundown at Bald Knob. Preachers could preach in them days. I had laid by my crap, an' had nothin' special to do, an', thinks I, I'll go to camp meeting an' sell er few pints er licker. But I soon seed I was lost accordin' ter Scripter, an' somehow or somehow else I felt powerful pestered. I just hauled down my colors an' give right up, an' I hain't sold no licker sense. I done fergive everybody, even old Brother Latham, who owes fer two quarts er licker bought at camp meetin' eight years ago."

At this point "Brother Latham" thought it time for a change in program, and asked that all unite in prayer, while a large number of the young people made for the spring.

Young folks can get mighty thirsty at camp meeting. Frequent trips are made to the spring by the belles and beaux, and it is also a noticeable fact that some of the couples had "pressing" business which caused them to remain away from the arbor, but those interested in their souls' salvation usually returned to the arbor in time to fall into line when the parson extended the invitation for penitents to come to the anxious bench.

Services are held almost continually during the day and late into the evening, and when the pine knot lights on the platforms covered with dirt around the arbor begin to flick and flare and cease to cast their shadows the older people retire to their beds within the tents, while the younger set are given an opportunity to make love and say sweet nothings while they chew sweet gum gathered from the trees near the springs.

To those reared amid the refining influences of cultivated society such decorum may seem strange, but when the environments and isolating circumstances surrounding these people are taken into consideration it is altogether excusable. No class of people on earth have a higher regard for truth, virtue and the Christian religion, and they are happy in the ignorance of the gay and frivolous ways of the upper crust of the world. They know little and care less about the outside world. They are true-hearted and stand by each other. They are truly the children of nature and love the bright sunshine and mountain wildness. Liberty and freedom go hand in hand with them, and this is second only to the love they feel for their God.

Near Gainesville there is a colored camp ground. The meeting here usually lasts from one to three weeks, according to the outpouring of the spirit and the tenacity of the provision crop. The preaching, shouting, singing and "trancing" of these people are somewhat novel. They occasionally get worked up to a very high pitch and become frantic when the grace of the Lord touches them, and sometimes one of them will go off in a trance and remain motionless for hours. After "reviving" they will tell wonderful stories of their visit to the heavenly land. Some of these stories are entirely unreasonable, but while they are being narrated the good members will stand by and groan "Amen!"

It was noticed, however, that, no matter how badly one of the sisters wanted to shout, she would always take the precaution to hand her hat to some good sister with the remark, "Hold my hat while I shout."

This is one of the few of the colored camp meetings of the original pattern left, and this gives it an interest that it would not otherwise have. The collection basket is not passed around, but those desiring to contribute walk up and place their coin on the altar where the hymns are sung, and some of them walk forward with as much pomp as if they were taking part in a cake walk. They glory in this manner of contributing. The meetings are not run for revenue only, and small collections do not lessen their zeal one whit. They get all there is to be got from such a meeting. The feature of the camp is the singing, and when sinners are called to the anxious bench the congregation sings snatches of hymns, occasionally ringing in a made-for-the-occasion line or two and always winding up with a refrain. There was never more touching music than these people make. It is weird and grand, and is sung like every word came from the very depths of their hearts.

One of their hymns ran something like this:

De Lord seed er sinner er cryin' an' prayin'—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
An' de devil was a-swayin' an' swayin'—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Den de sinner got 'ligion an' gwine ter git more—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
He'll lan' himself on de happy shore—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

'Postle Peter is standin' at de gate—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Not long fer dis sinner ter wait—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Dem heabenly lamps, dey burn so bright—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Dey seem so glor'us ter my sight—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

Abraham's bosom is safe an' wide—
Keep er prayin', sinner!
Dat am whar I'm er gwine ter hide—
Keep er prayin', sinner!

SCHOOL CHILDREN'S SPORTS.

Townball and Catball Superseded by the Diamond and Gridiron.

Have you ever noticed how regularly school children revert year after year to certain games and pastimes? One morning there is not a marble to be seen on the streets, the next day every lad almost comes out and is ready for a game of "bunk up" or "bull ring." School children's games have their regular seasons. To introduce any of them out of their fixed dates is to doom them to ignoble failure. The boys will not take them up. Football is invariably taken up in the fall term. It reaches its climax at Thanksgiving. In the same manner baseball comes up in the spring time. Top spinning is never more popular than during the crisp, cool, bracing October weather, but marbles are played in the early spring months, beginning during the bright days of March, after the snows have disappeared, and lasting sometimes as late as early June. Even the girls follow this unwritten law. Hop scotch, the greatest of all favorite outdoor pastimes, is played in the spring, as is the rope jumping and hoop rolling, but jack stones are played in the fall. The old game of three-old-cat is to-day out of date. School children have almost given it up. In its place the regular baseball nine has been substituted.

HOP SCOTCH.

Such are the games of the school children of to-day. There are few novelties because young America rather prefers to imitate his elders than to think out new pastimes. That is also the reason why youngsters have taken so readily to football in the fall and baseball in the spring. To have a match game with another school is productive of more real pleasure to them than an individual game of marbles. Their vanity, too, is touched, for to be in a football or baseball team is a greater honor to them than the winning of a pockeiful of marbles, for they receive the plaudits of their fellows and not infrequently that of their elders.

Wanted to Be Flogged.

Gen. Osborn Wilkinson, of the British army, after describing his experience when as a schoolboy he was "birched" at Eton—and a decidedly painful experience he makes it out to have been—proceeds to tell a singular story of another Etonian, who sought the switch in vain.

This boy was sentenced to be flogged for some misdemeanor, but fortified by the knowledge that his father was greatly opposed to the system of corporal punishment, refused to submit. He was at once expelled, and went home and reported what had taken place.

"Well, well," said his father, "this is most unfortunate. I have just succeeded in securing for you a commission in the Guards, and now, being expelled from Eton, you will no longer be eligible to her majesty's service."

The boy was distracted. His whole heart was set upon a military career. Seeing his son's grief, the father advised him to hasten back to school and beg leave to be flogged and reinstated.

The young fellow set off at once; but alas! vacation had begun, and the master had gone to the continent. Not to be balked, the boy followed, and having overtaken him in Paris, explained the situation and begged a flogging.

"But I can't do it," said the master. "I'm sorry for you, but it would be too irregular, and beside I have nothing with which to do it."

The boy had provided for that emergency, and when he produced a birch rod the master, seeing his sincerity, declined to use the switch, but rescinded the sentence of expulsion, and the boy was able to accept the desired commission.

THE "sacred bonds of matrimony" are being broken by the courts of this and other countries at an alarming rate. In this country, according to recent statistics, 20 per cent. of marriages now terminate in divorces, and 50 per cent. of divorces are granted on grounds that cannot be regarded as preservative of the home and society. From all of which it would appear that a large percentage of divorces are obtained simply because of the ease with which they are obtained. In this phase of the matter lies the source of alarm. For many years the National Divorce League has been trying to obtain uniform divorce laws in all the States. While uniformity of law would do much to lessen the number of divorces, it would seem that there should be a Marriage Reform League seeking to rehabiliate in the public mind the idea regarding matrimonial compacts, once predominating. Such a league cooperating with the former might accomplish much to benefit society. Marriage has been divested of much of its religious character; indeed, has become more of a civic contract. It was once protected by the church, it is now protected by law, and pretty loose law in some States of this Union. In about such proportion as the church has relinquished protection of marriages, have divorces multiplied; and in about such proportion as lawyers have made divorce laws, divorces have been rendered easily obtainable. Putting two and two together, it would seem that as respect for marriage vows has decreased, divorces have increased. Respect for marriage vows is the only guarantee of the home. Perpetuity of the home is the only safety of society. The rapid increase of divorces should therefore be a matter of deep concern, should be a matter for prompt and wise action regarding marriage in the first instance, and divorces in the second. Unless this great question is tackled at both ends, it never can be satisfactorily solved. This is the sum and substance of the matter.

A TARTAR BATTLE.

The Great Kaan Crushes a Bold Rebel Chieftain.

The Kaan was there on the hill, mounted on a great wooden bartizan, which was borne by four well-trained elephants, and over him was hoisted his standard, so high aloft that it could be seen from all sides. His troops were ordered in battles of 30,000 men apiece; and a great part of the horsemen had each a foot soldier armed with a lance set on the crupper behind him (for it was thus that the footmen were disposed of); and the whole plain seemed to be covered with his forces So it was thus that the Great Kaan's army was arrayed for battle.

When Nayan and his people saw what happened, they were sorely confounded, and rushed in haste to arms Nevertheless they made them ready in good style and formed their troops in an orderly manner. And when all were in battle array on both sides as I have told you, and nothing remained but to fall to blows, then might you have heard a sound arise of many instruments of various music, and of the voices of the whole of the two hosts loudly singing. For this is a custom of the Tartars, that before they join battle they all unite in singing and playing on a certain two-stringed instrument of theirs, a thing right pleasant to hear. And so they continue in their array of battle, singing and playing in this pleasing manner, until the great Naccara of the Prince is heard to sound. As soon as that begins to sound the fight also begins on both sides; and in no case before the Prince Naccara sounds dare any commence fighting.

So then, as they were thus singing and playing, though ordered and ready for battle, the great Naccara of the Great Kaan began to sound. And that of Nayan also began to sound. And thenceforward the din of battle began to be heard loudly from this side and from that. And they rushed to work so doughtily with their bows and their maces, with their lances and swords, and with the arblasts of the footmen, that it was a wondrous sight to see. Now might you behold such flights of arrows from this side and from that, that the whole heaven was canopied with them and they fell like rain. Now might you see on this side and on that full many a cavalier and man-at-arms fall slain, insomuch that the whole field seemed covered with them. For fierce and furious was the battle, and quarter there was none given.

But why should I make a long story of it? You must know that it was the most parlous and fierce and fearful battle that has ever been fought in our day. Nor have there ever been such forces in the field in actual fight, especially of horsemen, as were then engaged—for, taking both sides, there were not fewer than 760,000 horsemen, a mighty force! and that without reckoning the footmen, who were also very numerous. The battle endured with various fortune on this side and on that from morning till noon. But at last, by God's pleasure and the right that was on his side, the Great Kaan had the victory, and Nayan lost the battle and was utterly routed. For the army of the Great Kaan performed such feats of arms that Nayan and his host could stand against them no longer, so they turned and fled. But this availed nothing for Nayan; for he and all the barons with him were taken prisoners, and had to surrender to the Kaan with all their arms.—"The True Story of Marco Polo," St. Nicholas.

Wonderful Figure.

Some men are hard to please, especially in their flustered and ill-natured moods. The Scottish American has a story of such a man, an Edinburgh banker.

One day, when nothing had gone to suit him, he broke out suddenly to one of the clerks in a tone like a thunderclap:

"Look here, Jones, this won't do! These figures are a perfect disgrace. An office-boy could do better. If he couldn't I'd discharge him. Look at that five, will you? It looks just like a three. Nobody would take it for anything else. Look at it, I say."

"I—er—I beg pardon, sir," began the trembling clerk, "I beg pardon; but—er—well, you see, sir, it is a three."

"A three!" roared the manager; "a three! Why, you idiot, it looks just like a five!"

And the subject dropped.

Her Preference.

The judgment of men is apt to be warped by sentiment and feeling. In Scotland the people abominated hymns simply because the Episcopalians used them. The Presbyterians sang only the Psalms of David. The Episcopalians used stained glass in their church windows, and for that reason the Scotch looked upon stained glass as something of unholy origin.

A Presbyterian minister had been bold enough to introduce this hated innovation. He was showing it in triumph to one of his female parishioners and asked her how she like it.

"Ay!" she said; "ou ay! it is bonny. Eh! but I prefer the gless jist as God made it!"

A Collector.

"Missus," said Meandering Mike, "wus you ever a collector?"

"Yes; I've collected stamps and coins and souvenir spoons."

"Den you kin symp'tize wit me. I'm a collector."

"Of mud, judging by your shoes."

"No'm. Dat ain't me specialty. I've got de button fad. I've got more'n 700 different kinds o' campaign buttons; all I need, and what I come ter ax ye fur, is a coat to wear 'em on."—Washington Star.

CHINESE ARE THRIFTY FELLOWS

Start in Business on Borrowed Capital and Always Repay the Loans.

"In some respects the much-abused Chinamen," said Hong Sing Long, one of the interpreters and general agents of the Chinese Six Companies, to a Star reporter, "are ~~way~~ in advance of the ordinary workingman, and particularly so in regard to their Ready Money Association."

Hong Sing Long spends most of his time in New York, though he visits Washington several times each year. He is an educated Chinaman and has had the advantage of several years at Harvard and besides has been graduated as a lawyer.

"With the exception of one, all of the Chinese laundry places in this city are the result of the Ready Money associations; that is, the money necessary to start them came from the Ready Money. The plan is not unlike the building associations, which I am told have quite a clientele here, and which were originally started in Philadelphia. The Chinese plan is to start Ready Moneys as often as a party of Chinese find they have any surplus money on hand, the idea being to keep the money moving along. It is the custom of the laundry boys, for Chinamen always speak of each other as boys, to gather about on Monday, that being their off day, and gossip. All who have spare money put it in a pool and authorize some one to keep it personally as a deposit in a bank. As soon as the pool gets any size the word goes out and it is sold to the largest bidder, if there is more than one applicant for it.

"As a general thing there is but one applicant and he gets it, at a rate of interest agreed upon. It starts him in business and in a few weeks he begins paying back. Now and then there is no demand for the money. It then goes to the cities where it is needed. Just now the Chinamen are starting laundries in a number of small towns of the South, and my errand here now is to get some of the Ready Money funds to be advanced for that purpose.

"Safe! Perfectly safe. The civilization of the Chinese is no new thing. It is 5,000 years old. They have found out that honesty is the best policy; not on account of the moral or religious question involved as you understand it, but on account of the business proposition involved. Honesty is best because it pays, as for many other reasons. In business dealings Chinese are very strict, much more strict than any other people.

"The Chinaman knows that if he borrows he must pay back, and that the consequences of not doing so are very serious, much more serious than it is with Americans or Europeans. He knows this before he gets the money and does not take it unless he means to pay back. The man who acts as secretary of the Ready Money is also the treasurer. He takes pretty good care to give a good account of his stewardship, for his happiness depends upon his conduct. The Chinese Ready Moneys frequently close up in a week, though ordinarily they last longer. Each transaction is a separate one. A man may be a member of a dozen or have all of his money in one.

"The great advantage of the Ready Money is that it gives everyone who wants it money to open up business for himself whenever he sees the opportunity. There is no waiting—no security is needed except a promise to pay. The payment never fails, except for good reasons, such as accident or sickness. In fact, it does not pay to fail to pay, for it will cost more in the long run. When your civilization is 5,000 years old, you will know more than you do now, and will understand things that now seem to be wonderful in us."—Washington Star.

Electricity.

The paradox of modern science is furnished by electricity. In no other department of science has progress in the matter of application been so great that experts can well afford to acknowledge that what they now know with regard to the true nature of the subject is less than what they professed to know a quarter of a century ago.

An expert, writing in a recent number of one of the magazines, asks, "What is electricity?" and replies to his own question, "That is a question no man can yet fully answer."

A college president said not long ago, "No man knows what electricity is." In his "Dictionary of Electrical Words, Terms and Phrases" Dr. Houston defines electricity as "The name given to the unknown thing, matter or force, or both, which is the cause of electric phenomena."

Twenty-five years ago the text-books on physics attempted to give a clear understanding of what positive electricity is and what negative electricity is. The definition to-day of positive electricity is, "One of the phases of electric excitement," and the definition of negative electricity is the same except that the word "electrical" is used instead of "electric"—both meaning the same thing.

The intimate connection between electricity and light is well known, but the knowledge seems only to make the true nature of electricity more mysterious than before.

Yet electricity has come to be a "matter or force, or both," that is almost indispensable in the daily life of the civilized world. The "unknown thing" has been made to furnish power, light and heat. It has been harnessed for the service of mankind, and no man knows what is the thing in harness. The street car motorman who calls it "juice" knows as much about the real nature of it as the wisest experts know.

Likes and Dislikes of Birds.

Ditches are now in course of construction in the Big Horn basin, in Wyoming, which will irrigate 125,000 acres of land.

There should be something said on tombstones about husbands having been good providers, and less about "gentleness" and "love."

CLIMATE AND COMFORT.

Either way, whether we are to have a prolonged winter of extreme cold or a mild one, through the dampness and chill neuralgia will find its victims, and a great many imprudent people will find neuralgia. In either case, when it does come, with its racking torture, let's look about us for the best that can be done. We need not go far. The reputation of St. Jacobs Oil as a certain cure for neuralgia has gone before it, and it is an established fact that it cures surely, soothes and restores the troubled nerves. To enjoy, therefore, a comfortable winter, whether it is cold or mild, bear in mind that for this complaint one should have the great remedy for pain ready for use. It is by putting off that the ailment grows worse, and the worst cases grow less as soon as it is used.

A Conscientious Grace.

In "The Hutchinson Family" Mr. John W. Hutchinson tells this story of the Rev. Humphrey Moore, years ago minister at Milford, N. H.: "On one occasion he was asked to officiate at a Masonic celebration where a prayer was considered germane to the proceedings. All his denomination were opposed to the mystic order, and at first he hesitated, but finally complied, and at the appointed time and place made his appearance and offered the following prayer: 'O Lord, we pray for we know not what. If it is good, bless it; if it is bad, cuss it. World without end. Amen!'"

CHILDREN'S COLUMN.

A DEPARTMENT FOR LITTLE BOYS AND GIRLS.

Something that Will Interest the Juvenile Members of Every Household—Quaint Actions and Bright Sayings of Many Cute and Cunning Children.

Where's Mother?

Bursting in from school or play,
This is what the children say,
Trooping, crowding, big and small,
On the threshold, in the hall—
Joining in the constant cry,
Ever as the days go by,
"Where's mother?"

From the weary bed of pain
This same question comes again,
From the boy with sparkling eyes,
Bearing home his earliest prize;
From the bronzed and bearded son,
Perils past and honors won—
"Where's mother?"

Burdened with a lonely task,
One day we may vainly ask
For the comfort of her face,
For the rest of her embrace;
Let us love her while we may;
Well for us that we can say,
"Where's mother?"

Mother, with untiring hands,
At the post of duty stands,
Patient, seeking not her own,
Anxious for the good alone
Of the children as they cry,
Ever as the days go by,
"Where's mother?"

A Riddle for Grandma.

"Grandma, papa has sent you a riddle to guess," cried two little girls, bounding up to the porch where their grandma sat knitting in the sunshine.

"A riddle, hey?" said she. "It can't be a very big one if you two can carry it. What is it, then?"

"He says, 'How can Maud and I be his sons when we are his daughters?'"

"Well, the answer to that riddle is that you cannot be his sons, and I'm glad of it. I think that little daughters are the sweetest things on earth."

"No; but, grandma, he says that we are his sons," insisted Clara.

"Well, perhaps you can make as much noise as sons."

"That's not the answer, grandma," said Maud; "give it up?"

Grandma made a few more guesses, and then gave it up.

"He says that we are his s-u-n-s,' cried Clara, gleefully, "because we make sunshine for him. See, grandma?"

"Yes, I see," said the old lady, smiling down at two bright little faces; "make sons of his daughters by spelling them with a 'u.'"

A Multiform Vehicle.

The accompanying cut shows what the inventor calls a "composite vehicle," which may be used in three or four different ways to give children or invalids exercise or amusement. For example, it may readily be converted into a wagon, a perambulator, a rocking-horse or a swing. It is thus described in the Scientific American:

Figure 3 is a side view, as it appears when used as a rocking horse, figures 2 and 3 representing the device with the rockers and tongue removed, for use as a perambulator or swing. On the main frame, as shown in figure 4, a ring-like guard piece is supported on posts, a curved table being secured on the front edge of the guard piece, while at the junction of the members of the frame is a seat board, a detachable foot rest being formed by hanger bars.

A block simulating the head and neck of a horse is held on the curved table by means of a thumb screw, and at the front of the frame is hinged a tongue. In depending brackets are held caster wheels adapted to swing and revolve as required, and the caster wheels are adapted to be imbedded in places provided therefor in the frame bars of a detachable rocker frame, thus adapting the wheeled vehicle for use as a rocking-horse or chair.

To enable the device to be used as a swing, it is supported by cords connected to the main frame by hooks and eyes, as shown in figure 2.

"I'm No Dead Yet."

Over a door in a house at Edinburgh, Scotland, there stands the bust of a boy, with the words, "Heave awa, lads; I'm no dead yet," carved in the stone above it.

It tells part of the story of John Geddes, whose wonderful pluck, courage and hopefulness saved his life more than thirty-five years ago.

In the year 1861 a huge, rickety old building in the Scotch city suddenly crashed downward like the shell of an egg, and a number of families, among them the Geddes family, were carried with it and buried deep in the waste of fallen timbers. It was at night, and the wildest confusion reigned in the street, but above even the cries of the people came a clear voice from the ruins calling for help. It was little John Geddes, then only 10 years old, who had been caught between two timbers in such a way that he was not killed.

All night the rescuers worked to reach him, and he with wonderful pluck kept calling to them to guide and encourage them. Finally they were almost at the point where they had heard him call, but his voice was stilled, and they stopped, asking themselves if it were too late to save the brave little fellow after all. John heard them, and, gathering up all his waning strength, cried back to them:

"Heave awa, lads; I'm no dead yet."

They sprang to their work with renewed energy, and soon had him out, not very badly hurt, but almost exhausted from his long imprisonment.

And the people of the city were so proud of the boy's bravery that the bust was set up over the door of the new building, which replaced the old one.

It was a brave act, but we believe that there are many American boys who would have equal grit under circumstances just as trying.

The Kings of England.

Those who have once learned this jingle which gives the names of England's kings and queens since the Conquest have, no doubt, found it very useful. We suggest to teachers especially the helpfulness of such aids to memory as this old rhyme:

First William the Norman, then William his son,
Henry, Stephen, and Henry, then Richard and John;
Next, Henry the Third, Edwards one, two and three;
And again, after Richard, three Henrys we see.
Two Edwards, third Richard, if rightly I guess;
Two Henrys, sixth Edward, Queen Mary, Queen Bess;
Then Jamie the Scotchman, then Charles whom they slew,
Yet received, after Cromwell, another Charles too.
Next, Jamie the Second ascended the throne;
And good William and Mary together came on.
Then Anne, Georges four, and fourth William all passed;
God gave us Victoria—may she long be the last!

An Enemy's Service.

One of the stories of the Crimean War told by the novelist Turgenieff, and well authenticated by existing letters, is peculiarly touching. Sergius Ivanovitch, a young Russian lieutenant, was one of an attacking party which was ordered out on a cold night to drive a body of French from a position in front of the Russian lines. In order to be as free as possible in his movements, the young lieutenant left his military cloak behind.

The French were found well posted in the edge of a wood. A desperate fight followed at the end of which the Russians were compelled to withdraw, leaving their dead and wounded behind them. Among the grievously wounded was Sergius Ivanovitch, and all about him were French wounded.

Sergius suffered worse even from the cold than he did from his wound; and though a bullet had penetrated his leg, he was sure that the exposure of the night, rather than the wound, would be the end of him. Groaning and shivering, he was about to examine as best he could the wound in his leg, when some one said in French:

"You had best let your wound alone. Suffer, and disturb it as little as possible."

The Russian found that the man who had spoken was a veteran French captain, who, even worse wounded than himself, lay close by.

"No doubt you are right," said Servius, "but I shall perish of cold before morning, anyway."

Then the Frenchman reproved him for coming out in the snow without his cloak. "Experience has taught me," he said, "never to go out without my capote. But this time it is not likely to save me. I am mortally wounded."

"Oh, they will come and get you."

"No, my dear enemy. It is all up with me. The shot has gone deep—I shall not last till help comes. Here, take my cloak and wrap yourself in it and sleep. At your age one can sleep anywhere."

Despite his protests the young Russian felt the Frenchman's cloak laid upon him. Exhausted, he fell asleep under its warming influence. Waking in the morning, he found the French captain dead at his side.

A Safer Place.

An old man was breaking stones one day on a country road in Wales, when a gentleman came riding along.

"Bother these stones! Take them out of my way," he said.

"Where can I take them to, your honor?"

"I don't care where; take them to hades, if you like."

"Don't you think, your honor," said the old man, "that I'd better take them to heaven? They'll be less in your honor's way there."

Purpose of Life Preservers.

It is said that on account of their depth and coldness the waters of Lake Superior do not give up their dead. A recent traveler there asked the captain of a Lake Superior steamer why he carried life-preservers, the water being so cold that one could not long survive immersion. "Oh," was the nonchalant reply, "we carry the corks so that it will be easier to recover our bodies."

Superior officer—You are accused of sleeping on your watch. Sentinel—Impossible, sir. "Impossible? What do you mean?" "My watch has been at the pawnbroker's for six months."—Washington Times.

"Otto, you have a bad report. What does that mean?" "Yes, papa; teacher must have something against you!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

In certain towns of Germany the telephone is introduced by tobacconists as an additional attraction to customers. Anyone who buys a cigar may, if he desires, speak over the tobacconist's instrument to a subscriber to the telephone service.

In Germany the man who loses both his hands in an accident can claim the whole of his life insurance money, if he be insured, on the ground that he has lost the means of maintaining himself. A loss of the right hand reduces the claim from 70 to 80 per cent. of the total.

The duration of sunshine in the various countries of Europe was recently discussed at a scientific meeting in Berlin. It was shown that Spain stands at the head of the list, having, on the average, 3,000 hours of sunshine per year, while Italy has 2,300 hours, Germany 1,700 hours and England 1,400 hours.

Excavations made near Agya, in Northwestern Thessaly, by the Athens Archaeological Society, have brought to light the foundations of ancient towns and citadels, the very names of which are forgotten, with tombs of the Mycenian period, containing terra cotta vases with inscriptions, arms and works of art.

Of 274,940 Hungarian gypsies enumerated in the last census, 243,432 are described as sedentary, 20,406 as semi-sedentary and only 8,938 as nomadic, while 2,154 are soldiers or in jail. All profess some form of Christianity. Seventeen thousand are professional musicians and only 82,405 are still able to speak gypsy dialects.

A Brussels firm has just accepted a contract for the establishment of a telegraph system throughout Abyssinia. Each telegraph station is to be furnished with a telephone, and the more important are to be connected with the residence of Emperor Menelik, so as to enable him to keep, if not an eye, at any rate, an ear upon his dusky subjects.

Popularity proved too much for a Canadian widow, Mrs. Nettie Thompson, living at Erinsville, near Kingston, and she threw herself into Beaver Lake to escape the many wooers who sought her hand within a year of her husband's death. Her brother-in-law rescued her, and when she had time to think it over she regretted her precipitancy.

"Bulls" are not all of Irish origin, or at least they do not all originate in Ireland. A dispatch from Constantinople printed by the London Telegraph contains this radiant specimen: "Whether the powers will avail themselves of the opportunity to prevent the inevitable catastrophe that is impending remains to be seen."

A Georgia legislator named McCook thinks that possums are rapidly disappearing from the State as a result of the constant war that is waged upon them, and he is urging upon his fellow statesmen the duty of passing a bill to make illegal the killing of these interesting marsupials at any time between March 1 and Oct. 1.

The early British custom of erecting cairns, or heaps of stones, to commemorate events, is greatly in favor with the Queen. The first royal cairn was erected when she took possession of Balmoral, and the estate is now quite rich in these unique memorials, there being one to commemorate the prince consort's death and the marriage of each of her children.

Proportionately, there is no great town in the civilized world that has so few daily morning papers as London. This is due to the large expenditure involved in starting one. Anyone contemplating starting a London paper must be ready to lose $150,000 or $200,000 per annum for the first two or three years, and then it is an open question whether he will have turned the corner.

In Genoa there are regular marriage brokers, who have pocketbooks filled with the names of the marriageable girls of the different classes, with notes of their figures, personal attractions, fortune and other circumstances. These brokers go about endeavoring to arrange connections in the same off-hand mercantile manner which they would bring to bear upon a merchandise transaction.

The percentage of illiteracy among the whites of Colorado is 4.8; Idaho, 3.5; Kansas, 2.9; Montana, 4.1; Nebraska, 2.8; Nevada, 4.2; Utah, 5.1; Washington, 3.1; Wyoming, 3. On the other hand, the percentage of illiteracy in the white population of Connecticut is 5.1; Delaware, 7.4; Maine, 5.4; Maryland, 7; New Hampshire, 6.8; New Jersey, 5.7; New York, 5.4; Pennsylvania, 6.4; Rhode Island, 9.6; Vermont, 6.7; West Virginia, 13.

Syracuse has a leaning tower, but the Syracusans, unlike the Pisans, are not at all proud of their architectural freak and devote a lot of time to prodding the city authorities into taking action for its removal. The tower is a part of the great Stearns factory and is used in making wire. It is now thirteen inches out of the perpendicular and with every high wind sways about in a way that gives people living in the vicinity severe attacks of nervous prostration.

Complaint is made that in the Cape Cod cranberry bogs the native pickers have been supplanted by Italians, Finns and Swedes, and that thus another American industry has passed into the hands of foreigners. In regard to another and more celebrated New England industry, that of whaling, visitors to the cape of recent years have not failed to notice that Portuguese immigrants and West Indian negroes form the bulk of the crews.

The Ohio Wesleyan university of Delaware, Ohio, has received from Mrs. V. T. Hills of that place the gift of a collection of carbon photographs, numbering many splendid examples. These works, comprising selections from old and modern masters, will be hung in the halls and reception-rooms of Monnett hall, according to Mrs. Hill's letter of presentation, "to stimulate the love of art and to create and foster the art instinct among the budding girls and growing youth."

A New York physician, who has a very large office practice, has adopted a simple but effective plan for the entertainment of his patients while they are waiting. He has provided half a dozen ingenious puzzles, which are strewn carelessly around on the tables and on the mantel in the waiting room. Frequently there will be a score of persons in this room, and, for some of them, especially the nervous ones, the waits would be very fatiguing if it were not for the puzzles.

Maine's Spry Young Women.

Some of the young women are seeking fame by the same methods that have proved so efficacious in the case of elderly ladies. North Clinton has a young widow who milks three cows, does the work for two in the family, drives three miles and does a day's work, returning home at night in time to milk, mend the socks, feed the pigs, split the wood, etc. Then Canaan has a smart young woman, who, besides doing the housework for quite a large family this fall, did the milking and took all the care of two cows, the hogs, chickens, horses, etc.; picked fourteen bushels of apples, put them in the cellar, pulled two stacks of beans, and hauled in three large loads of pumpkins, and after digging and picking up fifteen bushels of potatoes, pulling thirty bushels of beets and turnips, and twenty-five heads of cabbage, put them all in the cellar herself.—Kennebec Journal.

The Reason.

She—Ma says she knows that when we are married we won't live so like cats and dogs as she and pa do. He—No, indeed! Your ma is right. "Yes; she says she is sure you'll be easier to manage than pa is."—New York Weekly.

AN INVITING FIREPLACE.

A FIREPLACE invites cozy lounging with book or magazine and agreeable conversation that has an accompaniment of crackling flames. An artistic fireplace carries with it the air of coziness. It is set in the back of a recess, out of the room, and has on either side an oak seat, with cushion. The whole back of the recess is brickwork, extending up to the ceiling. The brickwork drops back a few courses above the top of the fireplace, forming a mantel or shelf, on which may be disposed handsome bits of china as a decoration. The bricks used may be the red pressed bricks sold everywhere or some of the handsome bricks that are now made in soft colors, such as gray, yellow, brown and cream. Bricks of the same color, but varying in tone, some being a deeper shade than others, may be used with excellent results. The valance is a plain straight piece of dark maroon plush, and the pattern, a continuous border of tiger lilies and foliage, treated conventionally and worked solidly in couching stitch with shaded silks, in various warm tones of blue, crimson, gold and olive green. The edge is trimmed with festoons of many rows of narrow silk cords in the colors of the embroidery, each festoon ending in a long silk tassel, showing glints of gold thread.

Girl Prosecutor.

Miss E. Mae Danison, formerly of Rockford, Ill., now of Long Pine, Brown County, Neb., enjoys the distinction of being the first woman in the United States to have been elected to the office of county prosecuting attorney, having been chosen to fill this position in the recent general election. Miss Danison is 25 years of age and graduated from the law school last spring at the home of Mr. Bryan, at Lincoln, Neb. During the summer she was nominated for the office by the Populists and was indorsed by the Democrats. The nomination came to her unsought and she accepted it simply because of the compliment tendered, having no idea that she stood a chance of election.

ESTELLE M. DAVISSON.

Secret Societies for Women.

Many secret societies are now open to women. Wives can belong, equally with their husbands, to the Farmers' grange, they can join the Home Circle, as is fitting; or the Knights and Ladies of Honor, or the Order of Protection, or of United Friends, or the P. F. Y. B. O., or the Golden Cross. Moreover, if the husband is a Mason, the wife can at least belong to the Order of the Eastern Star; if he is an Odd Fellow, she can be an Odd Lady; if he attains to the G. U. of O. F., she can be a Daughter of Ruth, which is something; if there is a Son of St. George in the family, there can also be a Daughter of St. George; if there is a member of the G. A. R., there is a Woman's Relief Corps, consisting of those who do the duty of peaceful vivandieres for those worthy veterans. In short, the only prominent order which appears to make no provision for women is the Improved Order of Red Men, and this is rather surprising, as the tribes of this body have each a "keeper of wampum," and mistakenly appoint a man for this office, whereas the real Indian tribes usually intrusted their wampum to women.

Pollie Up the Skirts.

A correspondent of an Eastern paper, sympathizing with womankind in general, and that portion particularly that are caught out on the streets in rainy, muddy, or sloppy weather, has perfected an arrangement by which the skirts may be raised from the filth in a manner at once convenient and graceful. It is an arrangement of tape attached on the inside by small rings to the seams of the skirt, from which a ribbon is caught to the belt of the skirt. By placing the hand in the opening and pulling the ribbon, you lift the entire skirt to any desirable distance from the ground. By untying the ribbon the skirt falls again to its natural position of its own weight.

Charming Evening Gown.

A charming evening gown of silk mull, shown at a fashionable modiste's, is given an airy effect by eight fluffy, gauzy flounces on the skirt. The color scheme is carried out in a sort of delicate violet, almost suggesting a pink. This waist is of taffeta of the same shade, and is trimmed with a twist of mull, draped gracefully from the left shoulder to the right side of the waist. A trimming touch, which gives a French air to the creation, is a dainty bit of lace reaching only half way around the neck.

According to the best designs of the season teas and theaters, receptions and visits have their own cape coats and fur wraps, but these garments are so different from the other things that they deserve a full description all to themselves. The handsomest of a whole room full of such wraps was one where a short underjacket was made of cream white corded silk. The jacket was made to flare at the bottom and very much in the back. All around it was a narrow trailing rose vine embroidered in pink and green silk. There were rounded revers to the short cape of moss green velvet sewed to the jacket, which was sleeveless. These revers were embroidered in a pattern similar to that on the jacket portion. The high, flaring collar was velvet on the outside, faced with white corded silk, the scalloped edge being bound with a full shirred roll of crepe lisse. There was a crepe lisse puffing at the throat, from which fell a cravat of fine white lace. On the back of the high collar there was a widely spread bow of ribbon to match the color of the velvet.

Teach the Girls Housework.

A knowledge of the art of housekeeping is necessary to every woman, and it is never too early to begin to acquire it. When there are two or three girls in the family it is an excellent plan to allow each one in turn to assume the responsibility of housekeeping for a certain time. It does not hurt the girls to take a measure of responsibility concerning household tasks; far otherwise, it does them a world of good and lifts much of the burden from an overworked mother's shoulders. Let them in succession have a week at a time in charge of the chamberwork, the mending, the cooking, the buying, even, for the family, all, of course, under proper supervision, and their faculties of reason, perception, judgment, discrimination and continuity will be more developed in one month of such training than in six months of common schooling.

Hats Worn on the Side.

It will no longer be proper for the well-dressed woman to propound the time-honored query as she starts out for a ride or a stroll, "Is my hat on straight?" If that article is "on straight" she will at once rearrange it—tip it to one side or over one eye—and leave her home with the full consciousness that she is in the height of fashion. During the past year the correct position of the hat has been a tilt over the eyebrows. It was neither graceful nor becoming, but it was the fashion, and women of all ages and degrees fell meekly into line. Now the edict has gone forth that the hat must be tipped to one side.

A RELUCTANT READER.

Read Scott's Fascinating Tales as If in a Dream.

It is a very old proverb that you may lead a horse to water, but you can't make him drink. It might be added that if you could make him drink, you certainly could not make him enjoy the draught. A recent writer in Blackwood's Magazine gives an amusing account, which yet bears the impress of truth, of his experience with an honest, hearty, jolly British schoolboy, apparently of good general intelligence and a good student, whose family began to worry about his aversion to books. He regarded them as something to be dutifully studied when necessary, but to be avoided like the plague out of school hours. At last a promise was extracted from him to read one of Scott's novels. He gave the promise reluctantly in a hoarse and melancholy whisper, as he stood dejectedly staring around a pleasant library, but he kept it with entire fidelity. The volume given him was "Ivanhoe," which he volunteered graciously to call a "funny name," and this slight observation was regarded hopefully as a forerunner of interest.

For a whole month the lad had devoted himself to "Ivanhoe." Such was his conscientiousness that he never skipped a word, and so great his sense of the injury which the intellectual effort was inflicting on his leisure that he never took a single word in.

"Well, old fellow, how is 'Ivanhoe' getting on?"

"Pretty well, thank you."

"How far have you got?"

"Oh, I've nearly read"—and he consults the top of the page—"one hundred and twenty pages."

"And whom do you like best?"

A hasty glance at the page to see what name came handiest. "Oh, Wamba." (Wamba is the jester, or fool.)

He looked so extremely woebegone over the cross-questioning that the questioner made a feeble attempt at a joke.

"A little fellow-feeling, eh, my boy?"

Blank gaze.

"You don't know what I mean, I suppose?"

"No."

"Well, you know what Wamba was?"

"Yes," rather dubiously.

"Well, what?"

"One of the chaps in the book."

Now the unwilling reader stood well at school in history, so a week later they tried him again on a different tack.

"Have you found any old friends in 'Ivanhoe?'"

"No."

"Well, you know King Richard."

"King Richard?"

"Yes, Richard the First.

"Oh, yes; he was king 1189 to 1199."

"Well, you came across him in the tournament."

"I didn't know it was the same chap."

He was a sincere boy, but he will miss a great deal of pleasure with a mind so impervious to the charms of literature. With most young readers the Richard Coeur-de-Lion of the tournament soon usurps the throne of the matter-of-fact Richard of history; and it is certainly a rare youth who prefers the Richard of plain history to the splendid being with a battle-axe who rides through "Ivanhoe."

Quicker than Lightning.

"As quick as lightning" is a phrase colloquially used to express the maximum of rapidity. But according to a well-known scientist, electricity itself is outstripped by that old-fashioned machine, the human body, by which it appears powers can, so to speak, be generated in the brain, transmitted through the nerves, and developed in the muscles in an infinitesimal fraction of a second.

It is stated that a pianist, in playing a presto of Mendelssohn, played 5,595 notes in four minutes and three seconds. The striking of each of these, it has been estimated, involved two movements of the finger and possibly more.

Again, the movements of the wrist, elbows and arms can scarcely be less than one movement for each note. As twenty-four notes were played each second, and each involves three movements, we would have seventy-two voluntary movements per second.

Again, the place, the force, the time and the duration of each of these movements were controlled. All these motor reactions were conditioned upon a knowledge of the position of each finger of each hand before it was moved, while moving it, as well as of the auditory effect to force and pitch, all of which involves equally rapid sensory transmissions.

If we add to this the work of the memory in placing the notes in their proper position, as well as the fact that the performer at the same time participates in the emotion the selection describes and feels the strength and weakness of the performance, we arrive at a truly bewildering network of impulses, coursing along at inconceivably rapid rates.

Such estimates show, too, that we are capable of doing many things at once. The mind is not a unit, but is composed of higher and lower centers, the available fund of attention being distributed among them.

His View Confirmed.

He—Marry me, dear, and you shall want for nothing.

She—There! I always heard it said that marriage put an end to a woman's happiness!—Yonkers Statesman.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR,

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, FEB. 5 1896

At the close of each year John J. Valentine, President of Wells, Fargo & Co., issues a report of the gold, silver, copper and lead production of the United States, which has become a standard authority upon that subject. A large proportion of the precious metals is handled by Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express and Mr. Valentine's opportunities for obtaining accurate figures are excellent, and he has made the subject a careful study. The magnitude of the mining industry can be estimated when it is stated that the production of the precious metals in the States and Territories west of the Missouri river (including British Columbia) during 1896, was: Gold, $54,896,242; silver, $35,784,963; copper, $28,896,305; lead, $7,236,026; total, $126,289,536. The commercial value at which the several metals are estimated by Mr. Valentine is silver, 67 cents per ounce; copper 11 cents per pound; lead, 3 cents per pound. This aggregate shows a steady advance since 1893, when the total was $104,081,591. In 1894 it advanced to $105,113,489 and in 1895 to $118,164,642. The years 1889 and 1890 are the only two since 1870 in which the aggregate of production exceeds that of last year, and in these years by a million and a half and a million respectively. Among the States California leads in the production of gold, with $15,631,391, against $12,712,483 by Colorado. The latter State, however, largely exceeds California in the total production of precious metals, its silver nearly equalling its gold product in value, even at the present low price. Its silver product was $12,185,881, and its ores and base bullion nearly two millions more, making a total of $26,854,844. The production of Montana leads that of all the other States, aggregating $37,270,500. Copper, however comprises the major part of Montana's product, aggregating about $23,000,000. Its silver product was $9,350,000 and its gold yield $4,625,000. Arizona makes the fine showing of $9,265,917, but of this $5,882,909 is in ores and base bullion shipped out of the Territory for reduction. A tremendous impetus has during the past few years been given to copper mining, due very largely to the demand for copper created by the vastly increased use of electricity, which requires a large use of copper for wires etc. Until 1880 nearly all the copper of the country came from the Lake Superior mines—the Calumet and Hecla—these mines having a marvelous record of production and dividends, almost rivalling the great bonanza products of the Comstock in the value of their product. Of late, however, the copper mines of Montana and Arizona have made great records. Mr. Valentine places the copper production of the United States west of the Missouri river in 1880 at less than a million dollars, and since that time there has been a steady increase. In 1887 it reached $10,000,000, in 1890 $20,000,000 and in 1895 $27,052,115, and in 1896 $28,713,305. Copper mines are now in great demand. The effect of the low price of silver is shown in the decreased production, which has fallen off $64,808,637 in 1889 to $33,684,963, nearly one-half in seven years. The great proportion of this silver is not taken from silver mines proper, but from gold and copper mines in which silver is combined with the other metals. On the other hand the production of gold shows a large increase during the past five years. From 1879 to 1892 the annual production of gold in the territory under consideration averaged less than $30,000,000 per rnnnm. In 1892 it was $29,847,444; 1893, $33,948,723; 1894 $45,623,291; 1805, 48,399,729 and in 1896 it increased to $53,015,242. The prospect for the present year, particularly in California, is for a still larger production. Mr. Valentine's report also gives the return of Mexico's production. Mexico is essentially a silver producing country, and from 1878 to 1894 its annual product of gold was but about $1,000,000 per annum. In 1895 it jumped to $4,750,000 and in 1896 to $5,475,000. The silver production of Mexico has been steadily advancing from about $25,000,000 in 1878 to $54,450,000 in 1896.

Senator Perkins has introduced a resolution in Congress that is intended to pave the way for the establishment of a bureau or a department of the government to be devoted to the mining industry. The resolution recites, by way of preamble, that the mining interests of the United States have no clear representation in the organization of government and it provides for the appointment of a commission to be composed of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the Commission of Labor and the Director of the Geological Survey, whose duty it shall be to determine the best methods of arcertaining all the facts of general importance relating to mines and mining within the United States, whether by a mining bureau, a secretary of mines and mining, a commissioner of mines or a commission, and to report to the secretary of the interior a bill providing means for securing all necessary information concerning mining and related industries in the United States.

A Washington clergyman who was a candidate for the office of chaplain of the House of Representatives and received but three votes in caucus told a friend he had in his pocket letters from thirty members promising to give him their continuous support. He is now, probably, more convinced than ever that the average congressman needs a heap of praying for.

If the valley road is completed through to Bakersfield by June next, as is now contemplated, it will inaugurate an era of prosperity heretofore unknown in this portion of the State.—Gazette.

The following amendment has been introduced in the Legislature:

That section five of article eleven be amended to read:

"Section 5. The legislature by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties, and fix their terms of office. The legislature may regulate the compensation of all such officers and prescribe the number and compensation of their deputies, or may either wholly or in part delegate that power to any or all the Boards of Supervisors or municipal authorities. It shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid for them, or officially come into their possession."

John Stanton, who acts as statistician for the copper companies, states that the actual exports of copper from the United States in December were 12,980 long tons. This makes the total exports for the year 1896 no less than 125,605 tons, a quantity far in excess of that reported in any previous year.

China Newyear is in full blast.

A. A. Niel was down frow Aberdeen on Wednesday.

Miss Mary Mulholland is visiting with friends at Bishop.

P. H. Mack Esq. and J. R. Moffett went to Big Pine to-day.

Tom. Williams of Round Valley was a visitor in town last Saturday.

The sky is clouding over this afternoon and it looks like another storm.

Ben. Lasky of Lone Pine was a visitor in town on Wednesday.

J. A. Yerington shipped a car-load of silicon from his mine near Queen this week.

Philadelphia has been visited by a fire which destroyed $3,000,000 worth of property.

J. White Smith Esq., came down from Bishop yesterday on business in the Superior Court.

County Clerk Hession left for San Francisco on Tuesday. He will be gone about two weeks.

The same hearse carried "Little Pete" to the grave that removed Senator Stanford to the tomb.

Charley Summers came down from Bishop early in the week and spent a couple of days in town.

George Gilliam came down from Fish Springs early in the week and spent a couple of days in town.

Robert Love of Bishop, accompanied by his sister, Miss Agnes Love, were at Independence last Saturday.

It is reported that J. G. W. Birchim of Round Valley and Miss Frankie Shaw will be married at Bishop next Wednesday.

Inyo Lodge, No. 221, F. & A. M. will hold a public installation next Saturday evening, February 13th, and a banquet will be given.

A good deal of sickness is reported in this vicinity and at Lone Pine, mostly caused by la grippe. Dr. Woodin has been kept on the road constantly.

Harry Epstein, the genial and popular conductor on the C. & C., returned to his duties last Monday after a month's vacation pleasantly spent in San Francisco.

C. F. Wildasinn, J. H. Holden and Frank Skelton came down from Round Valley Wednesday on business in the Land Office. They returned yesterday.

There is said to be little or no wheat left for sale in the valley. Many of the farmers in this vicinity have sold so close that they will be compelled to import seed.

The late rain was a boon greatly needed by farmers and stockmen. There was a heavy downpour for about sixty hours and a heavy fall of snow on the mountains.

Ben. T. Williams came in from the South yesterday and will enjoy a short vacation. Ben. has been fanning mustangs on the southern division of the Mojave and Keeler stage line for several months.

Charley Anthony came in from Darwin on Wednesday returning yesterday. He recently met with a painful accident, having sprained on ankle badly. Charley is always rustling, however.

F. W. Holbert was down from Alvord this week. He has been adding to the fine band of beef cattle which he is fattening at the Sanger ranch and when the feed gets good on the desert will drive to Mojave.

The regular quarterly meeting of the New Stevens ditch company was held at Independence last Saturday and after transacting the regular business levied assessment No. 6 of ten cents per share. See notice.

Irv. H. Mulholland has sent his trotting stallion Osito, by McKinney-Twilight, to Los Angeles to be trained for the coming racing season. He will be worked until April 1st and if he shows sufficient promise will be entered in all the races of his class through the circuit.

Experting Copper Mines.

W. J. Ryan, a well known mining man, arrived at Independence last week and made some preliminary inquiries anent the copper mines owned by A. F. Mairs and J. Welsh at Ubaheba. These proving satisfactory Mr. Ryan wired N. D. Moore to come here and went to Hawthorne on Thursday of last week to meet him. Mr. Moore is one of the leading mining experts of the United States and represents unlimited capital, besides being a wealthy man himself. On Saturday an outfit was secured and the party started for Saline Valley. Should the inspection of the property prove satisfactory the mines will at once be extensively exploited. About eleven years ago Albert Bierstadt, of New York, the famous artist, became interested in the Ubaheba mines and in company with W. C. Chapin spent several days examining them. It was his intention to purchase the property and Mr. Chapin came as far as Alvord for the purpose of completing the deal when for some unknown reason he was recalled. The isolation of these mines is the only reason that they have lain so long without being worked. If the deposits of copper prove to be as extensive as is generally believed a railroad will be constructed to the spot. The party is expected to return next Monday and if Mr. Moore is not called away at once by his numerous business interests he will examine other properties in this vicinity. There is no question but that if capital becomes interested here extensive and valuable mining properties will be developed.

Bullion Shipments.

The Reward Mining Company this week shipped bar Nor 27, weighing 115 ounces and valued at about $1750. Twelve tons of concentrates were also shipped, valued at about $150 per ton. In the mine development work has been steadily going on and the mine looks better than ever. With increased milling facilities the output can easily be doubled with but very little additional expense for working. There is sufficient water power to run four times the amount of the present machinery. The tramway runs three hours a day and this keeps the mill supplied with ore. Mr. Hoskins, the superintendent, expects his brother to arrive from the east in a few days.

Sale of Inyo Mines.

D. C. Lane of Pomona signed papers Monday which conveyed his mining interests in Inyo County, consisting of the Last Chance, No. 2, Southwest and Sunshine mines, to a syndicate of Pomona capitalists for $80,000. This group adjoins the old silver mines of Darwin, which were famous in pioneer days. The mines are very rich in gold, silver and lead. The property was purchased by Mr. Lane two years ago, since which time he has worked it at a profit of about $1500 per month. The new syndicate will at once put into operation a ten-stamp mill, and will develop on a more extensive scale than before.

Surprise Party.

The young people of town and Camp Indepenpence joined in tendering Miss Maggie Gorman of Camp Independence a surprise party last evening. The town folks drove to the Gorman residence in a big wagon hauled by four horses. Their arrival was a complete surprise to the Gorman family who straightway gave them possession of the house. Music, games and dancing were indulged in up to a late hour. Refreshments were then served, and shortly afterward the jolly company started for home, singing as they rode.

Miss Irma Webb entertained a number of her young friends last Saturday afternoon, the party being given to celebrate her thirteenth birthday.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Callow have returned to Big Pine after an absence of several months. They will soon resume the management of the Big Pine hotel, which has been in charge of S. G. Gregg for the past six months.

The Nevada Legislature has passed a bill allowing prizefighting in that State and the Governor has signed it. This means a big fight on March 17th between Fitzsimmons and Corbett. Carson will probably be the favored [?] town.

Harmon Hankhammer came down from Big Pine yesterday with a load of corn for Bell's mill. Coming down the hill from the mill a breast-strap broke and the team ran away, breaking the tongue, but luckily doing no further damage.

The Harrell case, in which the defendant was acquitted, concludes the indictments against county officials, filed by the grand jury of 1894, commonly called the "long grand jury." In no instance was there a conviction.—Gazette, Bakersfield.

Three 12-animal teams loaded with merchandise are expected to arrive here to-day from Mojave. They are driven by John Schober, Rudolph Schober and a man named Enos. Harry Meads was loaded when he received word to go to Randsburg to haul ore.

Percy Douglass, for years a terror to the community about Bakersfield, attacked fire-chief Willows of that town last Friday night. Douglass was in a drunken frenzy and received a load of buckshot from a sawed-off messenger shotgun in the hands of Willows. The shot lodged about the heart and caused death almost immediately.

Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Frederickstown Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhœa for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time when he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Mining at Panamint.

While active work is being pushed in the immediate vicinity of Randsburg, many men are vigorously prospecting the country east of Randsburg in what is known as the State Range and Panamint districts.

The Panamint country has long been known as one of the richest mineral sections of California, and while it was worked many years ago, producing very rich ore, the country has been very much neglected on account of its inaccessibility. In the early days when the mines were being worked the Indians were troublesome. They killed many miners, and finally destroyed the mills and drove all the white people from the country.

The quartz ledges are said to be large, well defined and exceedingly rich. Water and lumber are more plentiful than at Randsburg. Parties just in from the lower Panamint, where they have been working on the old Amargosa mine, owned by Los Angeles people, bring good news of a rich strike in this mine. They say that they have opened up a six-foot vein, the ore running by mill test, $115 a ton. This mine is one of the old timers, and has a wide reputation. It is well known by all old-time mining men, having been worked in the early fifties.

The first quartz mill ever erected in Southern California was hauled from San Francisco by wagon and placed on this property. The mill was very crude, being built mostly of wood with iron shoes and dies. The freight cost 25 cents a pound. At this time forts were built to protect the men from the Indians. The ore produced from the mine at that time was fabulously rich. Much gold was produced up to the time the mill was destroyed by the Indians. Since then the mine has been closed down until the present owners took hold of the property. They intend to build a mill and start up the mine. The vein just opened shows permanancy and richness. To the north of the Armagosa mine is the Confidence mine. A large plant of machinery has been placed on this property.—L. A. Times.

Our Alkali Land

Alkali comes from the disintegration of the foundation rock, and the kind of alkali differs with the kind of rock from which it is formed. Alkaline salts are all easily dissolved; hence, in the rain belt they have all been washed out of the soil as fast as formed; but in arid regions they remain. White alkali is largely common salt, and is comparatively harmless except when deposited on the surface in excessive quantities. Black alkali is mostly sodium carbonate of sal soda, and is extremely injurious and in large quanity is fatal to most plants. After an irrigation the water, which held alkai in solution, evaporates leaving the dry alkali on the surface. As the drying process continues, more water rises to the surface by seepage and capillary attraction, bringing more alkali to the surface, and thus the crust grows in thickness. The union of alkali with clay forms clay hardpan. Humus is also dissolved and carried away by alkali. Deep tillage, flooding and underdraining are some of the means of improving alkali soils. Gypsum, or land plaster, converts black alkali into the less harmless white alkali; hence, a top dressing of gypsum is valuable, and its effect is permanent. The Australian salt bush flourishes in alkaline soils, and is an excellent forage. It lives many years, giving many cuttings each year, and it gradually takes up the alkali from the soil. The same can be said of sugar beets, mangel-wurzels and other root crops. Never apply ashes to alkaline soils.

New Law of Mine Locations.

A new law regarding the location and relocation of mining claims was prepared by the executive committee of the Miners Association on the 23d of last month and has been submitted to the Legislature. The bill demands that the discoverer of any vein or lode shall immediately erect a substantial monument at the point of discovery, and post thereon a notice giving a full description of the claim. Within sixty days he must mark his location on the ground so that the boundaries can be easily traced, and file in the office of the County Recorder the name of the claim, the name of the locator, the date of discovery and description of the claim. The relocation of an abandoned claim must be made by erecting at some point of the lode a monument, upon which must be posted the previous name of the claim, the new name, the date, name of relocator, the number of linear feet claimed along the length of the vein and the width on each side of the vein. Abandoned or forfeited placer or other mining claims must be located fn the same manner. If a locator discovers that there is an error in his location he may file an amended location.

I have given Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children.—Geo. E. Wolff, Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla. Sold by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

A FAMOUS RECIPE.

How the Hoboken Turtle Club Concocts Its Time Honored Turtle Soup.

Good livers will be interested in this recipe.

By it 150 pounds of turtle will produce 30 gallons of soup. It is the recipe used by the Hoboken Turtle club for many generations, and the original recipe is now in the hands of the steward of the club:

Take a kettle of 30 gallons capacity and fill nearly full of water. Put in 8 heads of calves' feet (32), well cleaned, and 30 necks of beef. To this add 2 dozen parsley, 1 dozen leeks, a half peck of small onions and sat and pepper to suit. Boil the whole to rags, about 20 hours.

Kill the turtle, scald off the thin outside glazed portion and take off fins. Put the shell, cut up into small pieces, into boiling water until the citron comes off. Then add the turtle meat, also cut in small pieces. To this add the meat of 8 calves' heads which have been sufficiently boiled to remove the skin.

Strain off the stock through a fine sieve. Strain twice out of pot and back again. Now add citron and boil three hours. Then add turtle meat and calves' heads and boil the whole until the citron is wholly done.

Add these spices: Quarter pound each of ground allspice, ground cloves, ground mace and ground nutmegs, a pound of sweet marjoram and the same of thyme and summer savory, with black and cayenne pepper to taste.

Put the spices into two small salt bags and drop into the pot until satisfactorily seasoned, taking out and putting in again from time to time and occasionally squeezing the bags into the pot.

After adding the turtle meat and calves' heads boil five hours until all the sour taste is gone. Boil over a slow fire and be sure to keep well stirred to avoid burning.

When cooked and poured into vessels, let it get perfectly cool before covering up or touching with a spoon. It should assume a gelatinous consistency. Keep at same temperature. Use 2 gallons each of claret, sherry and brandy.

Original recipe in possession of M. P. Phillips, steward Hoboken Turtle club.

POISONOUS POTATOES.

An Alkaloid Called Solanine Does Great Damage Sometimes.

It is not very rare to see serious accidents happen by poisoning from the use of potatoes in places where food is supplied by contract, as in schools, prisons and barracks, and astonishment is expressed that this precious and highly estimated food stuff should be capable of doing so much damage. It is well to know that the potato, even when absolutely sound, contains a certain amount of a vegetable alkaloid called solanine.

The remarkable point is that this solanine is much more abundant in summer than in winter; whereas it amounts to .044 per kilogram from November to February, it reaches the figure of .236 in July and August. This evil would not be very great if the production of the alkaloid were not still further increased by the process of germination and putrefaction of the potato. The use of potatoes deteriorated in this way may give rise to cases of poisoning characterized by vomiting, diarrhea, fever, dilated pupils, convulsions and profuse sweating.

It is usually in the months of June and July that these accidents occur, at the moment when the potatoes of the preceding year have begun to germinate and rot. The contractors of the above mentioned establishments send these potatoes there, since they have no longer any marketable value, because the new potatoes are already large and reduced in price.

It is therefore necessary to watch these supplies in a most careful manner and to refuse potatoes that show any black or softened spots or that have begun to germinate. As a general thing potatoes used in eating should be as fresh as possible.—Paris Herald.

READY FOR BUSINESS.

With a heavy active, energetic workingman, or a man of business, a cane or crutch is a sign of some infirmity, but he will have to use one or both if sciatica sets in and disables his hip. Worse than all this, he may be bed-ridden for a long time, and still worse, may be obliged to resort to surgical treatment. Why all this should be endured when the trouble can be easily cured must be, because he don't know that St. Jacobs Oil, the great remedy for pain, is a special cure for this very much dreaded malady. It has proved itself the most soothing and penetrating remedy for reaching the sciatic nerve and effectually curing its agonies that has perhaps ever been tried.

Conversation.—She—Strange how wet it is! He—Be stranger still if it were dry with such heavy rains.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

TAKING CARE OF BANK BILLS.

Soiled Notes Not as Common as Several Years Ago.

Bank notes are cleaner than they used to be. It is the policy of the New York banks to send their soiled notes to the United States treasury to be destroyed as soon as a sufficient number accumulates to justify it. Banks in the West send on whole batches of soiled New York notes to their correspondents in this city, and the bank that receives them sorts them out and sends round each little batch to the banks by which they were issued. These sorted notes are then sent to the treasury to be destroyed and others issued in their place. New York is thus a sort of depot for soiled and damaged notes of its own issue. The printing process for bank notes has been so developed of late years that the government has adopted this policy of frequently destroying soiled notes and reissuing good ones.

The Bank of England never lets a note go out a second time. Its lowest notes are for £5, so that the loss per pound is comparatively small in thus destroying little-used notes. Some, indeed, come into the bank as fresh in appearance as when they were issued. A note coming in is marked for destruction and laid away for a time. Meanwhile the name and address of the presenter are taken, along with the number of the note, in order that there may be some clew in case such a note is reported as stolen.

It is not suspected how important an element in a bank's profit on circulation is the destruction and loss of notes in the hands of holders. This was much larger in days when reissues were less frequent than now. The larger the amount a bank may issue the greater the loss in the hands of the people. A bank of this city that abandoned its circulation before the opening of the civil war yet has many thousands of its old notes out. They were outlawed years ago, though $3,000 of them presented about ten years ago were fully identified and redeemed. The whole issue of the bank was only about $250,000.

Although the average life of a Bank of England note is said to be but five days—and one seldom encounters a soiled Bank of England note in London—those notes circulate for years in the colonies, for they are taken abroad by travelers and are current almost everywhere. They circulate, along with our notes, in the regions bordering British Guiana. There are Scotch and Irish banks of issue emitting small notes, and these notes are often greasy and worn, since they are not regularly destroyed when they reach the home bank. Canadian bank notes are current along our northern border, and they are sufficiently like our own, being in dollar denominations, to deceive those not accustomed to make the distinction. They are often kept long in circulation on the border, and are occasionally worked off on the visiting New-Yorker, who finds them uncurrent in this city, and must exchange at a discount.—New York Sun.

Honorable Chinese.

Captain Younghusband, in his book, "The Heart of a Continent," bears a striking testimony to the honorable spirit manifested by the Chinese colonists in Manchuria. He and his companions were traveling through a dense forest, where nothing could be seen, and where life was made almost unendurable by swarms of midgets, mosquitoes and gadflies. At night, because there was no living out-of-doors, they would put up at the hut of Chinese sable-hunters.

Some of the Chinese, whose huts were found every twelve or fifteen miles, were trapping sables, while others were in search of the ginseng root, which is greatly prized by the Chinese for its supposed medicinal virtues. To the Englishmen their life seemed a hard one. The sable-trapping furnished a measure of excitement, but as for the ginseng hunters they would wander through the forest day after day, and all day long, and were content if they found one plant in the whole season. It would be worth, perhaps, fifteen pounds.

At one point Captain Younghusband noticed a clearing in the undergrowth near the trail, with a small plant standing by itself in the middle of it; and on turning aside to investigate he found the plant a ginseng. One of the Chinese had discovered it, but as it was not fully grown had cleared a space about it and left it to mature. It was valuable enough to reward a hunter for a full season's labor, and it could have been carried off with perfect ease, but such is the honor of the men that none of them would think of touching it.

Birds as Seed Carriers.

Two centuries ago the Dutch destroyed every nutmeg tree in the Moluccas in order to enjoy a monopoly of the business, having planted the trees in their own possesssions. In spite of their most earnest efforts, however, the islands were constantly being restocked. For a long time the thing was a mystery, but at length it was solved.

The doves of that quarter of the world are of large size, and readily swallow the seeds of the nutmeg. They traversed wide stretches of sea and land in a few hours, and deposit the seeds not only uninjured, but better fitted for germination by the heat and moisture of the bird's system.

By a similar process thousands of acres of land have been covered with trees of different kinds, the birds acting as nature's agents in the dissemination of plants.

Darwin found in six grains of earth adhering to the feet of a plover three different kinds of seeds, and in mud sticking to the feet of ducks and geese shot in England he found the seeds of plants peculiar to the Victoria Nyanza, in Central Africa, thus proving not only the extent of migration, but also the possibility of plants appearing in strange localities through the agency of these birds.

In the mud sticking to the feet of a Texas steer the seeds of five different kinds of weeds and grasses common to Texas were found by a microscopist after the arrival of the animal in New York.

A Student's Joke.

J. E. Dodson is an Englishman. "When I was at school at Harrow," he said to a reporter, "Campanini, then in the height of his fame as a tenor, sang for the first time in the city in Italian opera. If I mistake not, it was 'Trovatore.' At the end of Campanini's great aria in the third act there was a storm of applause. All the front seats in the balcony were occupied by students, and it was noticed that an almost invisible wire was strung from the middle point in the gallery horseshoe to the top of the prompter's box at the middle of the stage. What caused most people to notice the wire was the sudden appearance on it of a floral car of huge dimensions, over which hovered on spirals several stuffed doves. This car rode gradually down along the wire until it was in full view of everybody. Campanini's face was wreathed in smiles. He bowed now with his right and again with his left hand on his chest. As the car approached the prompter's box the singer moved forward to remove it from its trolley. Then was the keen zest of the occasion. Not only was there one wire—there were two. The second was attached to the car, and also to the hand of a particularly stalwart undergraduate. With marvelous rapidity the car shot back to the balcony. The smiles, I may add, did not tarry on Campanini's face."—Boston Transcript.

A Fatal Omelet.

Ignorance of cooking is not often the direct cause of a man's death, but such an instance is related by Miss Edith Lichel in a recent volume entitled, "The Story of Two Salons." In the time of the French revolution one M. Condorcet, upon whose head as an aristocrat a price was set, sought refuge with a friend, M. Suard, who bade him return at nightfall, when means of escape would be provided.

Unhappily Condorcet, being unable to exist without tobacco, went into a tavern to buy some. Still prostrate from fatigue, he thought he would take advantage of this opportunity to get some dinner and ordered an omelet.

"How many eggs do you wish to be used?" inquired the landlord, who had been eying him suspiciously. The innocent Condorcet was at his wits' end. He reflected on the size of the ordinary omelet.

"Twelve," he boldly replied.

His fate was sealed. None but an aristocrat could be so ignorant or so extravagant. He was arrested and led away to prison, from which he never emerged.

A Human Nose Two Feet In Length

Elephantiasis is a peculiar form of leprosy in which the limb and features swell to horrible proportions and out of all semblance to the legs, arms and faces of human beings. Cases are known where the legs have become so swollen that they measured 4½ feet in circumference. His Lip Gone.

M. M. Nicholson, who lives at the corner of Curran and Anderson Sts., Atlanta, Ga., had a cancer for years. It first appeared on his lip and resembled a fever blister, but spread rapidly and soon began to destroy the flesh. His father and uncle had died from Cancer, and he sought the best medical aid in different cities, but it seemed impossible to check the disease. Several operations were performed but the cancer always returned. This continued for years until the partition in his nose and his entire upper lip were eaten away. All treatment having proved futile, he looked upon death as the only relief.

"Some one recommended S.S.S." he says, "and a few bottles afforded some relief; thus encouraged I continued it, and it was not long before the progress of the disease seemed checked. I persevered in its use, and remarkable as it may seem, I am completely cured, and feel like I have new life. S.S.S. is the most remarkable remedy in the world, and everyone will agree that the cure was a wonderful one."

"PA NEVER DOES."

"I don' know why I has to tote

Through the temptation to be coquettish with her lover they had parted, and it was a question which was the most miserable, Mary Derwentwater, who had trifled with his love, or Henry Ashton, now wandering abroad in search of forgetfulness.

Ashton went forth upon the world an altered, almost a misanthropic man. His hopes were withered, his first dream of love had vanished, he felt as if there was nothing for him to live for in this world. His mind became almost diseased. He loathed society, then he veered to the other extreme and craved after excitement. He sought relief in travel. Like the fabled victim in the olden legend, he spent years in the vain search after that Lethe whose waters are reserved for death alone. He found it not.

And Mary, too, was changed. She rose from that bed of sickness an altered being. Never had she known the full depth of her affection until the moment when she found herself deserted. The shock almost killed her, and though she recovered after a long and weary sickness, it was to discard all her old habits and to assume a quieter, yet, oh! how far more beautiful demeanor than in her days of unmitigated joy. She felt that Henry was lost to her forever, yet she derived a melancholy pleasure in living as if the eye of her absent lover was upon her. She directed her whole conduct so as to meet his approbation. Alas! he was far away; she had not heard from him for years; perhaps, too, he might be no more; then why this constant reference of all she did to his standard of excellence? It was her deep abiding love that did it all.

Four years had passed when Ashton found himself again in America, and, sitting, after dinner, with one of his most intimate friends at the table of the —— hotel. For some time the bottle passed in silence. At length his companion spoke.

"You have not seen Mary Derwentwater yet, have you, Harry?"

Ashton answered calmly, with a forced effort, in the negative.

"You must not positively delay it. Do you know how beautiful she has grown?—far more beautiful than when you went away, although you thought her surpassingly lovely." He paused.

"I have not heard from the family for years," said Ashton at length, feeling that his companion expected some reply.

"Then you know nothing of her—push us some of the almonds—why, dear fellow, she is irresistible. But she is different from what she used to be; her beauty is softer, though not so showy, and whereas she once would flirt a little—mind, only a little, for she is a great favorite of mine—she now goes by the name of the cold beauty. A married man, like myself, can speak a little warmly, you know, without fear of having his heart called in as the bribe of his head. And do you know that my wife suspects you of having worked the reformation?"—Ashton started, and was almost thrown off his guard—"for it began immediately after a long illness that happened a few weeks after you sailed."

Ashton was completely bewildered. He had now for the first time heard of Mary's sickness. His eye wandered from that of his companion, and he felt his cheek flushing in spite of himself. He covered his embarrassment, however, by rising. His companion continued:

"And now, Harry, let us stroll down Broadway, for, to tell the truth, I promised my wife to bring you home with me. Besides, Mary is there, and I've no doubt," he continued, no doubt," he continued, jocularly, "you are dying to meet her."

Ashton could not answer, but he followed his friend into the street, conscious that Mary and he must meet, and feeling that the sooner it was done the better. His companion, during their walk, ran on his usual gay style, but Harry scarcely heard a word that was said. His thoughts were full of his cousin. Had she, indeed, become cold to all other men from love of himself? Strange and yet delicious thoughts whirled through his mind, and he woke only from his abstraction on finding himself in the presence of his cousin, in Seacourt's drawing-room.

Mary was on a visit to Mrs. Seacourt, and did not know of Ashton's intended coming until a few minutes before he made his appearance. Devotedly as she loved her cousin, she would have given worlds to escape the interview; but retreat was impossible without exposing the long-treasured secret of her heart. She nerved herself accordingly for the meeting, and succeeded in assuming a sufficiently composed demeanor to greet her cousin without betraying her agitation. He exchanged the commonplace compliments of the occasion with her, and then took a seat by Mrs. Seacourt, who had been one of his old friends. Mary felt the neglect; she saw he did not love her. That night she wept bitter tears of anguish.

Ashton did come daily, and although his conversation was chiefly devoted to Mrs. Seacourt, he seemed neither to seek nor avoid his cousin. Now and then he found himself in a conversation with her, and he thought of old times. But the memory of their last interview came across him at such moments like a blight.

"How wonderfully Ashton has improved since his travels," said Mrs. Seacourt one morning as she and Mary sat tete-a-tete, sewing; "and do you know," continued she, looking archly at her companion, "that I deem myself indebted to you for his charming visits?"

Mary felt the blood mounting to her brow, and she stooped to pick up a stitch.

"Oh! you are always jesting, Anne; you know it is not so."

"We shall see. I prophesy that this afternoon, when we go to the exhibition, he will escort you and leave Miss Thornbury to Seacourt's nephew."

Mary's heart beat so she could scarcely answer, but she managed to reply:

"Don't, my dear Mrs. Seacourt! don't tease one this way! You know, indeed you know, Ashton cares nothing for me," and she felt how great a relief would have been a flood of tears could she have indulged in them.

Mrs. Seacourt smiled archly and said no more.

The afternoon came. The little company were assembled in the drawing-room. Ashton entered just as the last moment had come, and when the ladies were rising to go. Mary was almost hidden in one corner, so fearful was she of attracting the raillery of Mrs. Seacourt, by placing herself near the entrance and in Ashton's way. Her very sensitiveness produced the effect she wished to avoid. The gentlemen naturally sought partners near them, and for a moment she was left almost alone. She thought she would have fainted when she saw her cousin cross the room and offer to be her escort.

They proceeded to the exhibition. For the first time for years Ashton's arm upheld that of Mary. At first both were embarrassed; but each made an effort, and they soon glided into conversation on different subjects. What a relief it was to Mary that night to think she had been alone, as it were, with her cousin without being treated with neglect.

From that day the visits of Ashton to Mrs. Seacourt's increased in frequency, yet there was nothing marked in his attentions to Mary. Indeed, he still continued to converse chiefly with his friend's wife, though he did not openly avoid her guest. Mary grew more and more tremblingly alive to his presence, and at times, when she would detect his eye bent on her, half sadly, half abstractedly, her heart would flutter wildly and a delicious hope would momentarily shoot across her mind; but soon to fade as quickly.

One morning Ashton entered the drawing-room and found her alone. She was untangling a skein of silk. She arose and said, with some embarrassment:

"Mrs. Seacourt is upstairs; I will ring for her."

"Not for the world, if she is in any way engaged. I can await her pleasure."

There was silence of some minutes. Mary could scarcely breathe, and knew not what to say. Her fingers refused to perform their duty, and the skein of her silk became more and more entangled.

"Shall I help you?" said Ashton, approaching her. "My patience used to be a proverb with you."

Mary could not trust herself to answer, for her fingers were actually trembling with agitation. She felt she could have sunk into the floor. She proffered the silk without looking up. Ashton took hold of one end while she retained the other. Neither spoke; but Mary's bosom heaved tumultuously, while Ashton felt his heart in his throat.

"Mary!" he said.

She looked half-doubtingly, half-timidly, up.

"Mary, we love each other—do we not?"

There was no answer, but as he pressed the fingers lying passively in his grasp, the pressure was gently returned, and, bursting into tears, his cousin fell upon his bosom.

The Sure Cure.

Dear boy, I will give you a tip
About a sure way to cure grippe!
Buy some greese at a dollar apiece,
And then bury your nose in the grease;
Melt some butter in streaming hot rum;
And drink till you hear your ears hum;
Mix some mustard and salt piping hot,
And sit with your feet in the pot;
Snugly under three coverlets creep,
And indulge in a long, dreamless sleep!
If all this the grippe's grip doesn't shake,
Then for Florida's brakes make a break!

It has been frequently asserted that there never were any slaves in the Buckeye State.

A striking illustration of the influence of fatigue upon the nervous system is afforded by an Italian physician some months ago. After two hours' rest the hearing had become normal in most of them.

A Toronto paper complains that, while theft from individuals is severely punished in the province of Ontario, dishonest city and town officials almost always escape with absurdly light sentences. Edmund Harvey, who, as treasurer of Toronto, stole money for years and amounting to many thousand dollars, has been condemned to three months in jail, and that, too, though he displayed insolent bravado all through his trial, while a fellow who took $200 worth of tools from a blacksmith's shop has been sent to prison for three years.

In Eastern Australia 100,000,000 sheep and great herds of cattle and horses now feed upon pastures covering flat ground, which, thirty years ago, was a desert of soft sand, so "rotten" that the feet sank at every step. This once worthless ground has been beaten into compact soil by the feet of the sheep and cattle, and it is believed that other great desert expanses in Australia may be turned into productive pasture, and in a similar manner.

When one reads that a device has been patented in England for applying watches with incandescent light without increasing the size of the watchcase, wonder grows from more to more—first, wonder how so big a device can be packed in such small quarters, and then wonder how long the watch will remain unmagnetized and true to the time with a potent little battery in its vitals constantly trying to mesmerize its movements.

An expedition sent out by the geological survey to explore the head waters of the Yukon and to discover if possible the source of the gold found along that river has returned with a wonderful tale of rich ore veins extending from British territory into Alaska in the neighborhood of Forty-Mile Creek, and running thence for 500 miles in a northeasterly direction. The gold belt is at least 100 miles wide and the geologists say that the deposits are fully as rich as those of South Africa.

Rev. Father Horan, of Rumford Falls, Me., secured the necessary funds to complete his new church by announcing that it would be opened on a certain Sunday, which turned out to be a bitterly cold day, and then preaching a sermon so long that its close was accompanied by the chattering of teeth all over the house. As if suddenly reminded that it was chilly, he remarked that it was cold indeed, and, expressing his belief that the congregation would cheerfully contribute money enough to plaster the walls and put in a furnace, passed the plate and got what he wanted.

A curious instance of the effects of Roentgen rays on the skin is reported in the Deutsche Medicintsche Wochenschrift. A 13-year-old boy was exposed naked for forty-five minutes to a very powerful apparatus to have his picture taken. A fortnight later a circular red spot appeared on his abdomen above the navel. It grew and broke out into small itching blisters. After six weeks the irritation ended, but the discoloration had spread over the whole abdomen. The skin then scaled off, and after a while resumed its normal condition. The process was precisely the same as in a case of severe sunburn.

It is the custom of many persons to grumble a little at what they consider the dentist's extraordinary charges. It is also frequently said that the dentist finds gold more profitable, and that this is the reason why he prefers to use it. It is not generally understood that there is a scientific reason for the employment of this metal. Gold can be welded into a solid mass while cold. It is also susceptible of being pressed into the smallest cavities and depressions. When once the cavity is properly cleaned out and the gold carefully put in, care being taken that it fills every particle of space from the beginning, the union of tooth and filling is nearly as perfect as possible without the action of heat. A gold filling is nearly as perfect as possible without the action of heat. A gold filling may be built up to almost any size or shape required. None of the acid secretions of the mouth or stomach have any effect upon it.

Mr. Du Maurier's Double.

If an obscure person could be frequently mistaken for a great man, it might be to the former's advantage; but when two men, equally famous, chance to resemble each other, the situation has its annoying as well as amusing side. The late Mr. George Du Maurier, the artist and author, had a double, and, strangely enough, the double is also an artist: Mr. Laurence Alma-Tadema, R. A. So remarkable was the resemblance, says Pearson's Weekly, that even their most intimate friends often mistook them.

A certain young lady, however, prided herself that she had no difficulty in determining which was which. On one occasion, finding herself seated next to Mr. Du Maurier at dinner, she remarked:

"I cannot understand how any one can mistake you for Mr. Tadema. To me the likeness is very slight." Presently she added: "By the way, I have a photograph of you. Do be so good as to put your autograph to it."

Mr. Du Maurier assenting graciously, the photograph was afterward produced. He looked at it for a moment, sighed, and then very gently laid it on the table.

"That," he remarked, "is Mr. Alma-Tadema's portrait."

Jules Simon's Modesty.

By his power of intellect and nobility of soul the late Jules Simon, the French statesman and philanthropist, raised himself to a high station, yet he remained to the close of his life a simple, modest man. This is what his friend, Baron Pierre de Coubertin, writes of him in the Review of Reviews:

Jules Simon was as modest as he was able. He had often expressed a wish that there might not be too much laudation around his tomb. He had often mentioned a desire to be told when death was approaching. A friend fulfilled this sad duty. The philosopher showed no signs of emotion or fright on hearing the terrible news.

As he could speak no longer, he motioned for a pencil and a sheet of paper, and with a steady hand wrote his own epitaph:

Harnessing Wind for Many Uses.

A sensible arrangement is portrayed by Farm and Home, showing how an ingenious North Dakota farmer makes full use of wind power. The machinery consists of a geared windmill attached to a pump, churn, washing machine, feed mill, wood saw and grindstone. The illustration shows the "pump house." The feed mill is on the upper floor, while on the ground floor is the washing machine, churn, and pump, all so arranged as to be easily hitched to the wind. The deep setting creamer, which is neatly kept, is set in one corner of the pump house. A spout carries water also to a watering tank near by, where cattle and horses quench their thirst. The circular wood saw, the grindstone and the corn sheller, e, have been added in making the illustration, as has also a water tank. This last is for use as a reservoir in very cold weather, to supply water to a smaller drinking tank outside the building. The water in this reservoir and in the creamer can be kept from freezing in winter by placing a small stove, if necessary, in the room. The stove would also be very useful at churning time and on washing days. Having machinery in a small house under the windmill does not prevent carrying the power by means of a chain, belt or tumbling rod, from the mill to other adjacent buildings. Screening wheat, grinding, shelling, cutting feed or other operations can usually be more conveniently done near the storage rooms. The mill is convenient to the kitchen and saves much labor in pumping water, churning, washing, etc.

A Convenient Farm Bench.

The illustration herewith, taken from the American Agriculturist, shows a bench easily made in the home workshop and very convenient in many operations about the farm—when planting the garden, grafting in the orchard, assorting fruit, dressing fowls, and a hundred and one other times when it is desired to have tools or packages raised above ground. When not in use, it can be folded into small space and put away, as shown in the first illustration. The construction is so plainly shown in the cut that little explanation is needed. The braces running from the middle to the bottom of the legs are hinged to the legs and go into slots a, underneath the bench near the center. The bench ready for use is seen in the second picture.

Some Careless Farmers.

A Western grange officer who has been traveling through the rural districts, was impressed with the careless habits of many of the farmers. He says: "I have been much over the country during the last two years, and when I see a plow standing in the corner of the fence, a binder under a tree, wagons, carriages and implements standing promiscuously about the yard, it always attracts my attention, and I have been very much surprised at the lack of care and thrift which a ride over the country will disclose."—Ohio Farmer.

Burying Apples for Winter.

Most cellars are too warm to keep fruit well. They are also subject to frequent changes of temperature, in which the fruit suffers almost as much as it does by being kept too warm. We have known farmers to put apples in pits as potatoes and roots are pitted, spreading a layer of straw over them in order to keep them from contact with the earth. Such apples come out with very little loss in spring, where care is taken that none which are specked were put up in the fall.—Rural World.

Cut Feed for Horses.

All farmers use cut feed for horses when at hard work, because there is a great saving in the labor needed to digest cut feed. If mixed with some grain meal and wet so that the meal can only be got by eating the cut feed mixed with it, the whole will be chewed sufficiently to moisten it with saliva, which is necessary to quicken digestion. But this economy in feeding cut feed is also important when the horse is not working. If the cut feed is corn stalks, it should always be steamed with very hot water, so as to soften the cut ends of the stalks, which may cause injury. This is the best, also, if hay or straw is cut, particularly wheat or rye straw, which, being harder than cut hay and less nutritious, is not likely to be thoroughly chewed. The stomach of the horse needs a slight irritation. This is the advantage which oats have over other grains. Its hull helps the grain to digest better, and this makes the horse feel frisky and able to do his best. It is an old saying of farmers that when an old horse begins to act unusually coltish he has probably "got an oat standing corner wise against his stomach, and he jumps around so as to get it out." It is a homely illustration, but may have truth in it.—American Cultivator.

Mutton Is the Best Meat.

Mutton is more easily digested than beef, though in a healthy man no marked difference would be observed, since in the stomach of such a man there arises no inconvenience from the digestion of beef. However, mutton will be found to tax the stomach of a dyspeptic person less than beef does. Lamb is not nearly so nutritious as mutton. The tissue is soft, gelatinous and rich in water. Lamb should not be selected for those whose digestive organs are weak.

A Device for Lifting.

It is often desirable in the stable, barn or other buildings, to raise some article from the floor for weighing, or other purpose. This is usually done by sheer strength in lifting. The simple device figured herewith will save much strength exerted in this way. On the top of a beam or crosspiece of the framing, mount a wooden roller, as suggested in the sketch. Whenever a weight is to be lifted it is only necessary to throw a rope over the roller and raise it as one would with a pulley. The roller should of course be as large in diameter as the beam is thick, so the rope will not draw across the corner of the beam.

Leaving the Farm.

It is generally a mistake for the farmer's boy to leave the farm, and in quite as many instances it is also a mistake for the old man to leave and move to town. It is a mistake for the boy to think he knows as much as his father. The latter may not be the more intelligent of the two, but he at least has the benefit of a great deal of experience that the boy has not acquired.

Plenty of Clover.

Plenty of clover will go a long way toward making a farm profitable. Think how many ways it can be utilized—for pasture, for hay, for feeding the stock or for feeding the land, sometimes serving the double purpose of feeding the stock and then going back to the soil in the manurial product. Fear not raising too much; it will always find a market.

Profitable Cows.

It seems doubtful whether large, coarse cows are more profitable, even when giving a heavy milk product. They are always very heavy eaters, and hard to keep in a rough pasture. A moderate sized cow, active and vigorous, will thrive better in rough pastures and upon coarse fodder.

Land-Poor Farmers.

Many farmers are land poor. Others have poor land. Both may be said to be robbers. The one robs his tenant and the other robs his soil and himself. The remedy is to sell a part of the farm in the one case and to add fertility and to adopt a wise rotation in the other.

Value of Good Roads.

It has been estimated that with good roads the farmers of this country would save $630,000,000 in getting their products to market. The savings of two years would be enough to pay off the national debt.

Ohio Farms.

Nearly 32,000 farms changed hands in Ohio last year for a recorded consideration of $46,000,000, or an average of a little over $30 per acre, ranging from $8 in Hocking to $77 in Lake County.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, FEB 12 1896

Charges are being made of corruption in connection with the election of a United States Senator in Washington, and so it goes on from year to year and ever will until the selection of senators is placed with the people where it belongs.

A decoction of cinnamon is recommended as a drink to be taken freely in localities where there is typhoid fever and cholera, for cinnamon has the power to destroy all infection microbes. Even its scent kills them, while it is perfectly harmless to human beings.

The two wings of the two old parties will, in Senator Palmer's judgment, be united in the next campaign. The sound-money Democrats and the sound-money Republicans will form one party and the silver Democrats and the silver Republicans will constitute another party.

The metropolitan morning papers are indulging daily in crimination and recrimination, each charging the other with faking, and all dealing in petty personalities, that minght be pardoned if indulged in by some country editor, but the great dailies in pursuing such a course, are in a pretty small business.

The Examiner charges the editor of the Call with accepting $1000 to be used to influence the votes of the councilmen of San Jose, while a resident of that city, and the Call charges the proprietor of the Examiner with being guilty of holding up the Southern Pacific railroad. Both papers seem to be making out pretty good cases.

Dr. David Starr Jordan has astonished the clerical gentlemen of this State by holding that revivals of a religious nature were a species of insanity and moral drunkenness. It has been many years doubted by the eminent divines whether incidents of emotional religion were really beneficial. Hysterical and feverish demonstrations are necessarily short lived and fail of the result desired.

The Australian detectives know their business, a fact that Murderer Butler probably appreciates at this time. When the officers get back to Australia the chances are that it will not take more than a month to get everything in readiness for a neck tie party. Butler must envy Durrant, who has been growing fat since his conviction a year ago for the murder of Blanche Lamont.

The coyote, in all the depredation of his destructive career, never did half the injury, morally and financially, to the State as has the law providing for his destruction. The numerous and unblushing frauds which have been the outgrowth of it would cause the average citizen to warmly welcome a return of the animal if the memory of these crimes could only be effaced.

The present Legistature might profitably take up the good roads question and by intelligent action thereon perform a real and lasting service to the interests and industries of the State, and one that will benefit every class and condition of its people The legitimate expenses of building substantial roads will be met by the average tax payer without protest, for the general proposition is recognized that the maintenance of good highways are largely conducive to the comfort and prosperity of a community.

The legislative proposition to change the law regulating the order in which names are placed on the Australian ballot has many points in its favor and the amendment will be in the interest of a fuller vote for the whole ticket, and will enable the average elector to vote more accurately. The present alphabetical arrangement is confusing to many voters and it is well known that many a ballot is cast and counted, on which no names have been stamped, other than for a few of the more important offices. The elector, unfamiliar with clerical work, becomes confused by the long list of names before him and in many cases stamps only such names as are familiar to him. The plan of placing the names of each party's nominees in separate columns will enable every voter to cast his ballot for his full party ticket if he is so minded and at the same time will not act as a bar to independent voting. It will be as easy under the new form for the intelligent non-partisan to pick out preferred candidates as it is under the present system, and generally the change will be in the tnterest of a futler and fairer vote.

The people of Mono county are asking the State to construct a wagon road twelve miles in length, across the summits of the Sierras; to connect the Tioga road, at the headwaters of the Tuolumne river, with the Mono wagon road. It is probably intended to carry this road through Bloody Canyon, to the shores of Mono lake. At present the people of Mono county cannot cross the Sierras by conveyance, without traveling hundreds of miles, through Nevada and around by Lake Tahoe, or through the Sonora Pass, which takes them a long distance out of their way, if their destination be any point south of the Yosemite valley. Mono county is situated east of the summits of the Sierras, and geographically is more nearly related to Nevada than to California. It has been an immense producer of gold and is still a fairly prosperous mining country. As a part of the State of California Mono county should be treated with sufficient consideration to enable its people to get into the State, without, as Assemblyman Keables said when presenting the matter to the proper committee, going half way to New York." The estimated cost of the road is $2000 per mile, and it ought to be built.

DIED.

LYLE—At Georges Creek, February 7, 1897, William Z. Lyle, a native of Washington Co., Tenn., aged 31 years, 4 months and 11 days

A social dance was given at Mairs Hall last Saturday evening.

Regular meeting Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M. to-morrow evening.

James Jones of Fish Springs spent several days in town this week.

Tim Madden reports about three feet of snow on the summit of the Inyos.

Nate Jacobs, representing the shoe firm of Cahn & Nickelsburg, was here early in the week.

Fred Alpers and Henry Gerkens were down from Bishop last Saturday on land business.

About twenty Mexicans are at work in the Mazourka district dry-washing and making wages.

Miss Clara Eldred of Big Pine was a visitor at Independence during the early part of the week.

The W. U. T. Co., has re-opened the Telegraph Office at this place. Mrs. F. Rhine taking charge on Wednesday last.

Mrs. J. J. Morton, who has been visiting with her parents for several weeks past, left for her home at Keeler on Monday evening last.

E. Chenot and Tommy Kehoe have returned from a trip to the Coso mineral springs. They both state that they were much benefited by the trip.

Robt. Hoskins, brother of Supt. Hoskins of the Reward Mining Co., arrived from Colorado last Monday evening. He will act as foreman of the Reward property.

Tom. Carroll came in from the Keys mine Wednesday for some needed supplies. He says that Pat has three men at work and has taken out quite a lot of good ore.

Dr. I. J. Woodin in stepping off the sidewalk in front of Levy's Hotel, sprained his ankle very badly this morning, and when last seen was busily engaged plastering and bandaging the bruised member. He hopes to be on his feet again in a day or so, for there are a number of patients under his care.

P. Laberge and Dave Pobst were in town Wednesday. They are running a tunnel in the Al. Rose canyon and will drift on the bedrock. They took up a load of lumber and track iron and will build a tramway and handle the dirt with a car. They have prospected the claim and think it will pay well.

On Thursday of last week an Indian known as Johnny Powers had some trouble with a Chinaman in the employ of O. H. Hill and threatened to kill him. He was arrested, examined before Justice Dunlap and held for trial in the Superior Court. Constable Billy Smith brought him down and lodged the dusky warrior in the County jail.

Last Saturday afternoon some twenty-five of the little friends of Lulu Moffett gathered at her residence and gave up their time celebrating the young lady's ninth birthday. At three o'clock an elaborate lunch was served and immediately afterward games were played until nearly dark. Last Saturday will long remain a bright spot in the calendar of these little folks.

Tim Madden came in from his mine in the Inyo range, near the Keys mine, on Wednesday. He and Joe Buckwalter are working together and are drifting and getting ready to stope out three good ore chutes. Their ledge is small but yields ore worth about $150 per ton, and they now have enough in sight to make a good run. They will erect an arastra to be worked by horse power about a mile from the mine, so they will not be to any great expense for reduction. John O'Day is running a tunnel on the same claim, and Tim says he has struck a good ore body.

CORBETT-FITZSIMMONS FIGHT.

CARSON CITY, NEV., MARCH 17th.

TO ALL OFFICES:

The Corbett-Fitzsimmons prize fight for the championship of the world will take place at Carson City, Nev., March 17th next. Bulletins containing full reports by rounds will be served at the rate of twenty dollars to each subscriber. Except that to theatres, halls or any place where admission is charged, a special rate will be named on application by telegraph to this office. In all cases where wire connection is desired the expense for operator and construction of pony wire will be collected in advance in addition to the regular rates.

F. JAYNES, Supt.

CARSON, THURSDAY, Feb. 11.—Dan Stuart arrived in Carson this morning at 10:30, and immediately gave out that Carson had been selected as the place for the big fight, as the people of that place worked very hard to secure the passage of the bill permitting glove contests in Nevada.

Corbett will train at Shaws' Springs, about one mile from Carson. He will give a sparring exhibition at the Opera House next Thursday.

Work on the big amphitheatre, which will be located at the race track, will be begun at once.

The Western Union Company say it will cost $2,500 to string the wire from Reno to Carson to handle the business.

Sale of the Lane Mines.

A Pomona dispatch of Feb. 1, says: D. C. Lane of this city today signed papers whereby he disposes of his group of mines in Inyo county, known as the Last Chance No. 2. Sunshine and Southwestern, to a syndicate of Pomona capitalists, including S. F. Owen, C. E. White, C. A. Ludden and others for $80,000, of which $40,000 is in cash. These mines are located within two miles of the old silver camp of Darwin, which was one of the richest and most famous in the history of California's pioneer days. They are very rich in gold, silver and lead. Two years ago Mr. Lane purchased this group for about $5000, since which time he has taken out nearly $30,000 worth of high grade ore. The Pomona syndicate, who claim there is yet $500,000 worth of ore in sight, propose to at once erect there a ten-stamp mill, and will immediately commence developments on a more extensive scale than ever before.

Mr. Lane has had many years' experience in mining, and will now retire to private life. He will shortly remove with his family to Los Angeles to reside permanently.

Obituary

William Z. Lyle, a nephew of W. L. Hunter, died at the residence of Mr. Hunter at Georges Creek, last Sunday, after an illness of about six weeks. The young man had every possible care and attention but his death was inevitable, and was caused by a complication of troubles resulting from disease of the kidneys. He was buried in the Odd Fellows cemetery at Independence on Tuesday. The deceased had been employed at the Hirsh mine for about a year and was held in the highest esteem by his fellow workman, nearly all of whom attended the last sad rites. The young man had no other relatives here except the Hunter family, and was unmarried. His mother lives in Tennessee of which State he was a native. During his last illness he received from Mr. and Mrs. Hunter every attention that could have been lavished upon a beloved son by the kindest and most affectionate parents, and to the Hunter children he was as a brother, and his untimely death is deeply mourned.

From Aberdeen.

On the evening of the 6th inst., Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Hines gave a birthday party in honor of their son, William, who on that day attained his majority. If each succeeding anniversary is the occasion of as much mirth and good cheer to the numerous friends, they will have more than one reason for wishing him many happy returns of the day. The evening was spent in playing games, dancing and other innocent amusements. About 12 o'clock a bountiful, delicious repast was served, and received ample justice at the hanns of the merry-makers.

AURORA.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited,

C. A. WALTER,
Independence, Cal.

I have given Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children.—Geo. E. Wolff, Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla. Fossils in Inyo County.

A Chicago dispatch of Feb. 3, says: Colonel T. W. Brooks and party will start from Pomona, Cal., this week for Inyo county, Cal., on an expedition sent by the Field Columbian Museum of Chicago to get fossil remains of turtles for the Field Columbian Museum and for the Chicago University. Colonel Brooks found the fossil remains several years ago, but never revealed his discovery until recently. He says that the expedition will cost over $700 and that he will take to Chicago soon the most wonderful fossil turtles ever known.

Colonel Brooks declines to tell the exact locality of these fossil remains, but he says it is close to the Nevada State line, and that the locality is full of wonderful fossil remains of fish.

Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Frederickstown Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhoea for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time when he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

John Schober met with a painful accident on his recent trip to Mojave. He was unloading hay at Haiwai when a bale slipped and fell on him, spraining one of his legs very badly. He was unable to drive his team home.

VIOLETS BLUE.

He sent her dainty violets
Tied up with ribbon white,
And in between the silver stems
He hid a note from sight.
"With these," he wrote in manly phrase,
"I send my heart to you,
And if you care to keep it, love,
Then wear the violets blue."

Before the gilded cheval glass
She donned her satin gown;
From shoulders white and slender waist
Its richness rippled down.
In folds of flame along the floor
She trailed its crimson hue;
"I cannot wear his flowers to-night,
Alas! that they are blue."

Behind the little withered stems
With silken ribbon tied,
Too well the velvet blossoms kept
Their secret till they died.
Two colors more the spinster Fate
Into her shuttle threw,
The crimson of a satin gown,
The violets' tender blue.

THE MIDNIGHT WATCH

It was during the time of my connection with the Blankborough police force that the incident related in the following lines occurred. Although there is nothing startling in the details, and the unraveling of the mystery with which they deal required no great amount of sagacity on my part, still I am inclined to think that there is sufficient interest about the affair to warrant making it public.

I was engaged with the superintendent one morning on some routine business when a note was handed in from Mr. Bridgnorth, a well-known solicitor practicing in the town. The superintendent read the missive and then turned to me.

"It is a case of pilfering, Sampson," he said, "and the thief, of course, cannot be discovered. There is nothing requiring your services this morning—go and see what you can do in the matter."

I put on my hat and went, as directed. Mr. Bridgnorth's place was well known to me and I was soon the occupant of a seat in the private room at his office.

"I have been a good deal concerned of late," said the solicitor, turning to the business at once, "about the abstraction of certain sums of money from my cash box in my desk, and as I fear that I am being robbed by someone in the office, and cannot put my hand on the actual offender, I am compelled to seek the aid of the police."

"Quite so, sir," said I, "and it will be both the duty and the pleasure of the force, and of myself, to give you every possible assistance in the matter. How long have the pilferings been going on?" I asked.

"About a week or ten days," was the reply; "and the robberies always take place at night, after the office is closed."

"How do you know that?"

"Because I count the cash in my desk every evening before locking up, when everybody has left, and again the next morning, before anyone arrives," said Mr. Bridgnorth.

"What are the sums you have missed?"

"They have varied. One night £5 was taken, another £7, and a third £3 and so on. Altogether I have been robbed of 55 sovereigns, and I don't know where it is going to end."

"Have you any suspicion as to whom the thief may be?"

"None whatever—unless——" Mr. Bridgnorth hesitated.

"Go on, sir," I said. "Give expression to your thoughts; they may furnish a clew."

"I was going to say," continued the solicitor, with some apparent reluctance, "unless it be Hartley, but I cannot believe him guilty of such a thing," he added.

"Who is Hartley?" I asked.

"My confidential clerk," replied Mr. Bridgnorth. "He has been with me ever since he was a boy and his character has always been above suspicion."

"Then why should his name occur to you in connection with these thefts?" I queried.

"Well, it is like this," said the solicitor. "Hartley and I are the only persons who sleep on the premises, and as there are no signs of burglarious entry and the thefts always take place in the night, I am, in spite of myself, driven to a certain conclusion."

"The natural one, in the circumstances," I ventured. "But tell me, you keep several clerks in addition to Hartley?"

"Yes; four others."

"At what time do they leave?"

"Six o'clock."

"When do you lock up?"

"About 6:30 or seven."

"You lock your desk and the office door?"

"Yes."

"Does anyone besides yourself possess keys of either?"

"Hartley does, of both."

"And you say he sleeps on the premises?"

"Yes."

"No one else?"

"Myself."

"But you do not live here, Mr. Bridgnorth?"

"Quite so. My residence is on the outskirts of the town, but for several nights I have been sleeping at the office."

"In order to catch the thief?" I queried.

"Indeed, that was not my motive, at all," said the lawyer, quickly. "And as a matter of fact the robberies have only occurred since my sojourn in the place; they never once happened before."

"Very likely. But, assuming that Hartley is the thief, can you suggest a motive for his pilferings?" I asked.

"None whatever," was the reply.

"What kind of a life does he lead? Steady?"

"Nobody more so."

"Doesn't bet nor gamble?"

"Neither, to my knowledge. He is engaged to a very respectable girl, and I know, as a fact, that he shortly contemplates housekeeping."

"Ah! there is a motive for pilfering," I said, with a shrug of the shoulders.

"How so?" asked the solicitor.

"Why, a house requires furniture and furniture costs money," I said.

"Then you think that Hartley is helping himself to my cash in order to fit up his house?" said Mr. Bridgnorth, sadly.

"It looks remarkably like it," I replied. "But we shall probably see. Of course, you have not charged him with the thefts?"

"No, for I cannot persuade myself of his guilt."

"And he has no knowledge of the object of my visit?"

"None, so far as I am aware."

"Very well, let him keep in the dark for the present. Meanwhile, can you tell me your object in sleeping on these premises the last few nights?"

"Well," said Mr. Bridgnorth, slowly; "it is this. For some little time I have found myself out of sorts. There is nothing really the matter with me, that I know of, but I have been spending a lot of restless nights, either getting no sleep at all, or only sufficient to do me little good. Under the impression that a change of apartments is sometimes a remedy for insomnia, I decided, as I am a bachelor and have only myself to please, that for a night or two I would sleep here, where there is plenty of room and ample accommodation."

"I see."

"Well," went on the solicitor, "the change answered admirably. From the very first night I slept soundly, save for some persistent dreaming, which nightly haunts me and leaves me somewhat unrefreshed in the morning. The old woman who comes in to do for Hartley finds it little extra work to prepare a dormitory for me, so I have remained for the present. This is the explanation.

"Thank you, sir. We will now try and run this thief to earth. What I propose is very simple. Find me a hiding place here to-night—a screen or a cupboard will do, for I am used to cramped quarters—and I will see what is to be seen. Lock your desk and door as usual, but provide me with a key of the latter for use if needful."

Mr. Bridgnorth agreed, and shortly after I took my departure. As I passed through the outer room I got a look at the clerks, and in particular at Hartley, which I was enabled to do without exciting suspicion. Judging from appearances the fellow looked like anything but a thief, having a frank, open countenance, and lacking altogether that shiftiness of vision characteristic of almost every rogue. Aware, however, that there is nothing more deceptive than externals, I went away little doubting that Hartley was my man.

Late that evening I presented myself at Mr. Bridgnorth's door and was received by that gentleman in person. The office was closed, the clerks had all gone home, and Hartley was out, presumably love-making. Mr. Bridgnorth found little difficulty in securing me a retreat behind a cabinet which stood in one corner of the office, and here I ensconced myself with as much comfort as the circumstances permitted.

At 10:30 the solicitor retired, locking both his desk and the office door before going upstairs, and providing me with a duplicate key of the latter, as I had desired. Hartley would be home he informed me, about 11 o'clock, and would doubtless go straight to his room.

The lawyer's estimate proved correct, for almost exactly on the stroke of the hour a key turned in the lock of the outer door and the confidential clerk entered. He had no occasion to come into the office in order to reach his apartment, but on his way past he paused a moment and tried the handle of the door, and finding it fastened went on his way. A minute later I heard the closing of his chamber door and my watch began.

The time passed slowly away. Twelve o'clock struck, then 1 and 2, and I had begun to think that my vigil would be in vain, when in the stillness of the night I heard a door softly opened above and a cautious footstep slowly descend the stairs. It paused at the foot of them, close to the door of the room in which I lay hid, and I next heard the jingling of a bunch of keys, as if the possessor of them were selecting the right one to fit the lock. A moment later the portal opened and the pilferer entered.

The place was in darkness and I had to strain my eyes to watch his movements. The lantern I had with me I did not desire to use until the right moment, for it was my hope to capture the thief in the very act of his larceny. I had not very long to wait. Wrapped in a long gown and without shoes on his feet, the pilferer glided stealthily to the desk, and fitting a key into the lock lifted the lid. He then open the cash box and took out some of the coins.

Now was my time. Slipping from my hiding place I turned on my lantern and confronted the culprit. As I did so I gave a stare of surprise, for the man I encountered was Mr. Bridgnorth himself, and I could tell by his closed eyes that he was fast asleep, and, of course, quite unaware of what he was doing.

Seeing that the light from my lantern bothered him somewhat (for he passed his hand several times dreamily across his face), I replaced the shade and the somnambulist at once closed and fastened the desk, and then walked out of the office, locking the door behind him. Noiselessly I reopened it, and followed him.

He retraced his steps up the stairs, and, going to a cupboard on the landing, stooped down, rummaging a second or two among some old rubbish at the bottom, and seeming to deposit his coins there. He entered a chamber adjoining. Peering cautiously into this, I saw the sleeper divest himself of his gown and get unconsciously into the bed he had a few minutes before left.

Well, Sampson," said Mr. Bridgnorth, when he came down the next morning, "what is the result of your watching? Have you discovered the thief?"

"I think I have, sir," was the reply.

"And it is—is it—Hartley?" inquired the solicitor, anxiously.

"No, sir, it is not Hartley," I said.

"Thank God for that!" ejaculated the lawyer, fervently, as if the statement of the fact relieved him. "But, then," he asked with some surprise, "who is the culprit?"

"Before I tell you that," I replied, "kindly see how much you have been robbed of during the night."

He went to his desk, counted over the coins, and said:

"Four pounds!"

"That makes in all——?" I queried.

"Fifty-nine!"

"Come with me, Mr. Bridgnorth," I said. "I should not be surprised if I can put you in possession of your money!"

With a puzzled air the lawyer followed me up the stairs to the cupboard I have mentioned, the door of which I opened. A pained expression came over the man's face as he watched me.

"How strange!" he murmured, half to himself, half to me. "I have been dreaming every night of this recess in connection with these pilferings, and the things inside it all seem familiar to me, though I have never once seen them before!"

"Stoop down, sir, and feel in that corner," I said.

He did as I bade, and drew out sovereign after sovereign.

"Count them," I said, when he had got all that he could find.

"Fifty-nine!" he exclaimed, going over the pieces one by one. "The exact amount of my losses!"

"Just so," I said, "and now, if you will come back to the office, I will tell you who is the thief before Hartley comes down."

We returned to his room and there I informed him, to his intense astonishment, of what I had witnessed. "If you will pardon the liberty, sir," I said, at the conclusion of the narration, "I should advise you to see a doctor. You are evidently suffering from some mental affection which, if neglected, may develop into a disease the effect of which you cannot foresee."

The lawyer acted upon my suggestion and called in a specialist, who ordered him a prolonged rest. A trying and complicated case in which he had been recently engaged had apparently proved too much for him and brought on this peculiar form of brain trouble. When last I heard of him he had returned, seemingly quite restored, and Hartley, his confidential clerk, married to a charming wife, was about to be taken into partnership with him.—Tit-Bits.

The King's Dog.

A curious advertisement appeared in a London paper in the year 1660. Somebody had stolen one of the king's dogs, and on the 28th of June a request was made for the animal's return, stating that he was "a smooth black dog, less than a greyhound," and was to be returned to John Elles on his majesty's back stairs.

The dog was not forthcoming, and a second appeal was issued. It is supposed to have been written by King Charles himself, as no one else would have adopted such a familiar style in using the monarch's name. The King's sense of humor and appreciation of the state of affairs at court are well shown in the little advertisement.

"We must call upon you again for a black dog, between a greyhound and a spaniel, no white about him only a streak on his breast and a tall a little bobbed. It is his majesty's own dog, and doubtless was stolen, for the dog was not born nor bred in England, and would never forsake his master. Whoever finds him may acquaint any at Whitehall, for the dog was better known at court than those who stole him. Will they never leave robbing his majesty? Must he not keep a dog? This dog's place (though better than some imagine) is the only place which nobody offers to beg."

A Street Crowd.

The easiest thing on the face of the earth to entertain is a street crowd. Everything but curiosity in such a motley jam is forgotten. Rich and poor, ignorant and learned, stand elbow to elbow with craned necks and open mouths. Just such a crowd as this blocked the way on Tremont street yesterday at frequently recurring intervals. Every time a very solemn-looking man appeared in the show window there was a scramble to see whose nose would be flattened on the plate glass first. All the solemn-looking man did was to open a couch and proceed to make it into a bed by turning the plush cover mattress side up and putting on a pair of pillows. When the pillows were squared up the crowd was so great that a policeman had to compel the outer layer of spectators to move on. They did so, grumblingly.

Then the bed was unmade, and a parlor couch greeted the people, who smiled and departed. In a few minutes this scene was again enacted. The bed-making man never once relaxed his countenance or hastened his laborious movements.—Boston Advertiser.

A Natural Tunnel.

"The Natural bridge of Virginia has always been regarded as a great wonder, and justly so," said E. R. Paine, of Bozeman, Mont., "but there is a far greater one in Idaho near the Bay Horse mine, which is known to very few people, and they have never paid any attention to it, except to make some exclamation of wonder when they first saw it. There is a tunnel through a granite mountain. The tunnel is a little over a mile long, is wide enough for a double track railroad to pass through and is straight. The walls of this natural tunnel are nearly as even as they would have been had it been blasted through by men. Of course, it has been formed by erosion, but how is a mystery. Scientific men can explain it, just as they can explain any cave that has an entrance at either end, but it does not satisfy those who see it. If a railroad should ever be built through that country the natural tunnel will be found exceedingly useful." —Washington Post.

Druggists Up to Date.

Druggists keep about as close watch of the season as any people in the world. When the spring days appear and ladies are thinking of putting away their furs the drug store windows suddenly fill with moth balls, powders and preparations warranted to knock the spots off a moth at forty rods. When the sun gets up a little higher the moth balls disappear and tan and freckle lotions and preventives for mosquito and fly annoyances take the public eye. When the blazing heat of summer is with us, cool soda with pure fruit syrup signs nestle up against corn remedies and root beer packages. The fall comes on and then the cough lozenge is hatched. Alongside it are sure cures for la grippe, colds, influenza and toothache, while hot soda steams and sizzles at your asking.

Artists' Fancy Dress Ball.

A fancy dress ball is given once a year by the lady artists, sculptors, singers and actresses of Berlin. No males are permitted at this ball, and about one-third of the attendants go in masculine costume.

An Animal Census.

The latest enumeration of the animals known to science includes no less than 386,000 recognized species. The real number is believed to be very much larger. It has been estimated that of insects alone the earth harbors 2,000,000 species, but the late Prof. Riley regarded even that estimate as far too low. According to his opinion 10,000,000 would be a moderate estimate of the number of insect species! The number of individuals is, of course, incalculable.

Thousands of Tons of Dust.

According to the estimates of Mr. J. A. Udden, who has studied the remarkable phenomena of dust and sand storms in the arid regions of the West, every cubic mile of the lower air during an ordinary "dry storm" contains at least 225 tons of dust, while in severe storms of this kind as much as 126,000 tons of dust and sand may be contained in a cubic mile of air. Dust storms sometimes last for twenty or thirty hours.

Shielding Off Lightning.

It is reported that an official inquiry recently made in Germany concerning the effect of telephone wires on atmospheric electricity, showed that a network of such wires extending over a town tended to diminish the danger from lightning during thunderstorms. Reports were compared from 900 towns, of which 560 possessed telephone systems, and the conclusion drawn was that a network of wires lessens the danger in the ratio of 1 to 4.6.

Termites Destroy a Cable.

The French Academy of Sciences was informed last summer of the destruction of an electric cable in Tonquin by the attacks of termites. The cable crossed a marshy tract and was enclosed in a tube of lead. The insects bored holes in the tube and completely destroyed the insulation of the cable. It has been proposed to guard the cable against future attacks by enclosing it in an envelope of cotton and jute impregnated with sulphate of copper, which, it is believed, would prove a fatal poison to the insects.

Iceland's Earthquakes.

The terrible earthquakes which have recently occurred in Iceland, beginning in the last week of August, have been more severe than any that have shaken that island since 1784. In the extent of country affected they are the greatest ever known there. During the worst shock landslides rushed from the mountains, huge rocks fell from the steeper peaks, pastures were buried, farm houses were destroyed—though fortunately with very little loss of life—new geysers were formed and old ones ceased to flow, and deep chasms and fissures opened in the ground. It is reported that the natives earnestly hope that one of the great volcanoes will break into activity, as they believe that would put an end to the earthquakes by relieving the subterranean stress.

Black Men in Persia.

Old inscriptions and carvings have shown that there existed in ancient Persia members of a race of black-skinned men, who possessed features resembling those of Africans. The origin of these people, as well as their apparent disappearance in modern times, have furnished puzzling questions for ethnologists. Some have supposed that in prehistoric times the greater part of Southern Asia was occupied by a primitive black race, of which only vestiges remained when the empires of Babylonia and Assyria arose. Lately descendants of the black men who figured in the early history of Persia are believed to have been found by the Russian explorer, Doctor Danilloff, dwelling among the mountains near Shiraz, east of the Persian Gulf. These people, although they still form an independent group, mingle with the surrounding population, as in ancient times, and find employment at long distances from their home. Some of them are to be seen in the city of Teheran.

For Exploring the Sea-Bottom.

A spherical box containing compressed air, and large enough to hold three or more persons, has been invented by an Italian named Corzetto, for the purpose of exploring the sea bottom. It appears, however, that the invention is not yet a practical success, for when Mr. Corzetto, accompanied by two of his friends, entered his sphere and was lowered to the bottom of the Bay of Spezia recently, the apparatus for causing the sphere to rise to the surface failed to work. Unable to help themselves, or to communicate with the outer world, the three men remained on the sea bottom. In the meantime the long submergence of the sphere had been noticed, and a diver was sent down to find out what was the matter. At this time the sphere had been lying on the bottom nine hours, and an equal length of time elapsed before it could be lifted to the surface. When it was opened the inventor was half asphyxiated and his friends were unconscious, but all recovered; and Mr. Corzetto is not discouraged.

To Make Them Laugh.

Some of the superstitions of the Chinese have a humorous turn. They have an impression that when there is a long drought it is because the gods are either angry or in a bad mood, so they dress a dog in a comical way and lead him through the streets. All the people laugh, and it is supposed that the gods cannot help laughing too. After that, no matter how long after, it is sure to rain, and this proves that the Chinese theory is correct.

We don't see anything so sad in falling leaves. Leaves never fall until they are dead, but some people fall while they are still alive.

Nearly every woman knows a man who is the slowest man on earth.

A FALSE TEACHING.

That Man's Chief End Is to Crucify Spontaneity on the Cross of Drudgery.

The Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst writes of "The Young Man at Play" in The Ladies' Home Journal. He asserts that "it is play rather than toil that is most germane to our true nature and that lies closest to the divine intention. The care needing to be exercised as to the quality of our amusements must never be construed into a verdict against amusements in themselves considered. With most of us the play impulse stands far more in need of encouragement than it does of restriction. The proverb, 'It is better to wear out than to rust out' is true in form, but false in spirit.' The flowers do not wear out, but neither do they rust out.

"One reason why so many people are asking whether life is worth living is that we are teaching ourselves that man's chief end is to struggle and to crucify spontaniety on a cross of drudgery. We are not arguing for indolence. Indolence is as distinct from play as a pool is from a mountain brook. But we shall be greatly disappointed in heaven if it does not give a great deal of opportunity for energy to issue in activity that takes no thought and is a joy to itself, and an experience that will be saintly in heaven can hardly with reason be criticised as limp and puerile if indulged in before we enter heaven."

A Unique Village.

Buckland-on-the-Moor, a secluded village of Devonshire, England, has no public house, parson, policeman or pauper. The squire owns all the land. The farms are small, but profitable. The farm laborers live in the squire's cottages. When they fall sick, the squire pays their wages as usual, and when they are too old to work any more they are continued on the pay list and potter about, doing what they please.

The Grewsome Mahratta.

The grewsome mahratta wadkah, the weapon of the Hindoo assassin, is shaped like a tiger's claws and fastened to the fingers of the right hand by rings. With a treacherous embrace the murderer claps his victim and tears him open, leaving him mutilated in a condition that leads the discoverers of the body to believe a tiger or some other wild beast has clawed the man to death.

In 1861 Mendoza suffered from an earthquake, which shattered many houses, and fire broke out among the ruins, occasioning the most terrible conflagration the city had ever known. Over 10,000 lives were lost on this occasion.

A[illegible]H FEAR.

There are thousands who have looked forward to the return of cold frosty weather with dread, knowing that it brings to them their old chronic attacks of rheumatism. Why should any one bear it in winter or summer when it is so well known what will cure it and make it stay cured. St. Jacobs Oil will penetrate through stiffness and soreness to the center of rheumatic pains and aches in their worst forms and will subdue them. In the coldest or the hottest climate it does its work of cure regardless of how long one may have suffered. Why then so foolish a fear? What can be cured should be endured only so long as it takes to get a bottle.

He Got Judgment.

A Washington attorney is rather noted for the facility with which he forgets financial obligations. He has owed a certain grocer $8 for a year or two. The other day the merchant concluded to try a new course with him. Meeting him in his store, he said:

"Judge, I have a customer who owes me a small bill and has owed it for a long time. He makes plenty of money, but won't pay. What would you do?"

"I'd sue him," said the lawyer emphatically.

"Well, I will put the account in your hands," and the merchant presented a statement of the account against himself.

"All right. I will attend to it," said the disciple of Blackstone.

A few days later the merchant received the following note from the lawyer:

"In the case of —— against —— I took judgment for full amount of your claim. Execution was issued and returned 'no property found.' My fee for obtaining judgment is $10, for which amount please send check. Will be glad to serve you in any other matters in which you may need an attorney."

THE sunshine is unusually bright to-day. My Uncle Tobe and I are sitting on the balcony which overlooks the broad, fair stream below, adorned with the afternoon sun's last rays.

It is Sunday. In Sunday dress and holiday spirits crowds are hurrying towards the big excursion steamers, panting along the shore.

How I would like to be one of them! I am young and hungry for pleasure. But Uncle Tobe doesn't understand. He doesn't care for such amusement. "It's useless waste of time," he growls.

I might tell him it's just for the sake of innocent frolic, but he wouldn't understand that, either. He understands only the serious side of life, earning money in the sweat of one's brow, and he says such money mustn't be spent foolishly. Uncle Tobe is a bachelor, whom fate has burdened with the care of two homeless children. He might have shaken off the burden, but he was too conscientious, too honorable for that. He was the only relative to whom we could turn—I, the daughter of his sister, and Philip, his brother's stepson.

We were quite small, when he took us into his house, two mischievous wights, for children know little of sorrow. I am sixteen years old to-day, and cannot yet be serious and demure. Philip is more ungovernable even than I. When we are together we laugh and chatter, so unreasonably loud, Uncle Tobe says, that he is compelled to drive us from his presence.

"Silly youngsters! What right have you to laugh?"

When he took us into his home, he turned me over to his old housekeeper, Mrs. Mitchell, saying:

"Take the little thing! Her parents had no business to burden the world with such a useless little worm!"

Mrs. Mitchell shook her white head.

"Let her grow up with the flowers," she answered. "All she needs is a little sunshine."

Yes, we needed sunshine, Philip even more than I. He was the elder by four years, and full of silly notions, Uncle Tobe said. He carried home all sorts of animals, much to the distress of Uncle Tobe, but when he infested the house and the entire neighborhood with white mice, it was decided that he should be sent to a boarding school.

Philip was satisfied. It couldn't be any worse than at home, he mused. Henceforth his life took on a different hue. His teachers complained of his careless habits, his boyish pranks, but they could not gainsay his talents and bright, active mind. He was expelled from two schools on account of his unruly conduct, and when he begged Uncle Tobe to send him to college, the latter refused. No, he must learn a trade.

I don't know how many different lines of work Phil tried, but he never remained more than a few weeks in any one. At last he was apprenticed to a druggist. The work seemed to suit him. There were complaints, of course, but of a different nature. Philip was constantly experimenting. He came near blowing up the house once. Yet his employer praised his cleverness and his indefatigable desire for study.

Every Sunday Philip paid a visit to his home, and then he built air castles of wonderful inventions which he was about to make, and begged Uncle Tobe to advance him money. He might as well have preached to deaf ears. I was glad when he was gone, for the scenes that took place between him and Uncle Tobe had become unbearable.

Sitting on the balcony that lovely Sunday afternoon I sighed and gazed dreamily into the beautiful world beyond. My jolly companion I knew was confined to his dingy quarters in town. What was he doing? Concocting some healing draught, perhaps. Perhaps selling a Sunday ration of bonbons to some lucky youngster! What a trial we are to Uncle Tobe! Why didn't he get married and have children of his own, then he wouldn't have been expected to care for other people's waifs?

I lean across the balcony rail to watch a newly arrived boat unload its human freight. And—there is Philip!

"Uncle Tobe," I exclaimed, "Phil is here in the crowd!"

"Of course," he growls, "he is always to be found where he has no business to be. Don't beckon to him, I don't want him up here."

But I had already waved my hand to Phil, and a moment later he stood before us.

His eyes were ablaze with joy. How happy he looked. "Aren't you glad that I am here?" they said, as they beamed down upon my upturned face.

Uncle Tobe knit his brows. "What are you doing here? Why are you not at work?"

"It's Sunday, uncle, and now I have really invented something valuable. My employer says so, too, and all I need is a little money to experiment with and take out a patent. Uncle Tobe, you'll help me out just this one time, won't you?"

"Not if I had a thousand times the amount you want."

"It isn't a large sum, uncle; try me just once," he pleaded. And I—I pleaded with him.

"Leave me in peace," groaned Uncle Tobe, "I am tired of it all. You forget that you are a poor waif who eats the bread of grace in my house. You'll either go the way I point or choose your own. You are no longer a child!"

"You are right," cried Philip, with cheeks aflame with anger. "I am no longer a child. It's a shame that I should take alms from such a hand as yours. It has been the last time. I'll go my way henceforth."

"And starve at it!" mocked Uncle Tobe.

I trembled in every limb. It had never been as bad as this before. "You cannot mean what you say," I begged.

"Yes, I mean it," declared Philip.

"And so do I," added Uncle Tobe.

For a moment Philip stook stark still looking at me, then he dashed down the stairs and aboard the steamer which was about to leave the wharf.

In the crowd I lost sight of him. The bell rang out sharply. I was alone and in despair. Behind me stood Uncle Tobe.

"Let him go, Vreda; he'll come back, I'll give him the money after awhile, but not now. Young folks are too impatient."

"You should have given it to him now, Uncle," I answered with choking voice.

* * * * * * *

Philip had not returned. The sun had gone out of my life. The rollicking echo was dead. The days were gray and dreary, the nights interminable. We had no friends. There was no one to come to a house that had no open door; no hand of welcome!

Uncle Tobe wrestled with figures half the day, the other half he devoted to business errands. In the evening he read the newspapers. I was like a deaf mute.

"Take a good, long walk every day," suggested compassionately Mrs. Mitchell. "You look like a ghost, and are fading away!"

Alas! there was no one, for whom I would have exerted myself to keep fresh and young. The sooner I grew old and gray the better I would fit into my surroundings.

For Philip I cried bitter tears. Uncle Tobe never mentioned his name.

"Poor old man, he must be fond of you both," Mrs. Mitchell was wont to say now and then when I went to her room to talk of Philip. "He is working himself to death trying to buy this little house. My nephew tells me this; he is employed in the office of his attorney."

"I hate the place since Phil is gone," I cried bitterly. "Everything is gone, the birds, the flowers and the people. Only we—we are chained to this same old spot."

"Wait, Miss Vreda; wait, later on, perhaps——"

"That's what Uncle Tobe says, and then it will be too late."

"Not for you. You are young, Miss Vreda, but your uncle, nobody can make him see what he ought to do."

* * * * * * *

We lived our lonely lives and I had lost all hope that things would ever change.

One morning we found Uncle Tobe dead in his chair. He looked as if he had dropped into a peaceful slumber. Mrs. Mitchell and I seemed turned to stone when we discovered him. I felt no sorrow, but I was terribly frightened. When the doctor came he said that he could do nothing.

The funeral was very quiet and unostentatious. There were no tears, no lamentations, no flowers, no friends. After we had laid him away it occurred to me that the home in which I had lived so long would now be closed to me. But the thought had no terror. It was a relief, rather, to be free. I knew nothing about earning my bread. Freedom was all I craved.

On the day after the burial, Uncle Tobe's testament was opened. Philip and I were his heirs. He had bought the little home and had left us enough money to live in comfortable circumstances.

"May God bless you," he wrote. "I had no one on earth but you!"

I sobbed aloud as I listened. "Oh, if he had only given Philip the money when he needed it!" I must go out and find him.

Mrs. Mitchell soon convinced me of the futility of such a beginning. Philip would come home sooner or later.

"Poor uncle, your happiness was all he worked for!" was Mrs. Mitchell's admonishing cry.

"He has taken it from me," I wailed; "he has made me miserable, and him—Philip! he may be lost forever!"

I lived quietly on with Mrs. Mitchell in the little house by the river. From day to day I waited. The trees took on fresh foliage and then came the autumn and the winter. I waited in silence. With the spring hope was renewed within me.

Suddenly, on the brightest day of all the year, the bell rang with a clang. I knew the sound and hastened to the door. Philip stood before me, but not the rollicking youth whom I remembered. The man in whose arms I lay had a serious, thoughtful face. I cried aloud.

"Be still," he whispered, "I don't want uncle to know. I don't want to see him. I want you, only you!"

"Uncle!" I repeated. "Don't you know that he is dead?"

"I am not sorry," he said bitterly; "he took from me my youth. Want, care, anxiety were my companions on the way. After many struggles success crowned my efforts, and now we need no longer depend upon him. My factory is far away. My invention was worth its weight in gold."

His eyes beamed down upon me as they did on that fateful Sunday. He took me into his arms. "I came back for you, my happiness, my youth. Come, teach me how to laugh again!"

We cried and laughed in one. When he had told me everything I showed him Uncle Tobe's last will and testament.

"Not a cent of this money will I take," cried fiercely my lover, the companion of my childhood. "He has made our hearts bleed often enough for it!"

We were married and moved to the large city, where Philip had his factory. The little house we turned over to Mrs. Mitchell's care. Every summer we came home, bringing our children with us. My husband's heart has softened toward the lonely old man who had driven him forth into the world, and on the anniversary of his death our little Tobe lays sweet violets on his grave.—Sunday Republic.

A BOY AND AN ORANGE.

Laurence Hutton Tells How He Succumbed to a Temptation in Youth.

The Boy was taught, from the earliest awakening of his reasoning powers, that truth was to be told and to be respected, and that nothing was more wicked or more ungentlemanly than a broken promise. He learned very early to do as he was told, and not to do, under any consideration, what he had said he would not do. Upon this last point he was strictly conscientious, although once, literally, he "beat about the bush." His Aunt Margaret, always devoted to plants and to flowers, had, on the back stoop of his grandfather's house, a little grove of orange and lemon trees in pots. Some one of these was usually in fruit or in flower, and the fruit to The Boy was a great temptation. He was very fond of oranges, and it seemed to him that a "home-made" orange, which he had never tasted, must be much better than a grocer's orange; as home-made cake was certainly preferable, even to the wonderful cakes made by the professional Mrs. Milderberger. He watched these little green oranges from day to day, as they gradually grew big and yellow in the sun. He promised faithfully that he would not pick any, but he had a notion that some of them might drop off. He never shook the trees, because he said he would not. But he shook the stoop! And he hung about the bush, which he was too honest to beat. One unusually tempting orange, which he had known from its bud-hood, finally overcame him. He did not pick it off, he did not shake it off; he compromised with his conscience by lying flat on his back and biting off a piece of it. It was not a very good action, nor was it a good orange, and for that reason, perhaps, he went home immediately and told on himself. He told his mother. He did not tell his Aunt Margaret. His mother did not seem to be as much shocked at his conduct as he was. But, in her own quaint way, she gave him to understand that promises were not made to be cracked any more than they were made to be broken—that he had been false to himself in heart, if not in deed, and that he must go back and make it "all right" with his Aunt Margaret. She did not seem to be very much shocked, either; he could not tell why. But they punished The Boy. They made him eat the rest of the orange!

He lost all subsequent interest in that tropical glade, and he has never cared much for domestic oranges since.—St. Nicholas.

One Boy's Feminine Weakness.

Although he became foreman of a juvenile hook-and-ladder company before he was five, and would not play with girls at all, he had one peculiar feminine weakness. His grand passion was washing and ironing. And Ann Hughes used to let him do all the laundry work connected with the wash rags and his own pocket handkerchiefs, into which, regularly every Wednesday, he burned little brown holes with the toy flatiron which would get too hot. But Johnny Robertson and Joe Stuart and the other boys, and even the uncles and aunts, never knew anything about this—unless Ann Hughes gave it away.—St. Nicholas.

Honey in Butter.

Parisian restaurant-keepers mix a little honey with their butter. This gives it an agreeable taste and flavor and makes the inferior butter more palatable.

To Load Logs.

Roll the log on a good-sized pole, back the wagon, the butt end of the log should be about the center of the hounds, then get a thick block, a, and pry up with a stout pole, b, and while the boy is bearing down on the pole quickly fasten the log chain, c, securely around the log. Next insert a stout pole, d, about 6 or 8 feet long under the chain on top of the log. While bearing down on the pry pole have the boy place a thick block across the hounds; the thicker the better. This takes the strain off the hounds. Let the pole rest on this and the log is loaded. In loading a large heavy log, pry it up and place a thick block under it. Then fasten the chain as before, insert the pole, bear down on the pry pole, have the block placed across the hounds, and the log is again loaded. By this simple method one man and a stout boy can load any reasonable size log without any heavy lifting.—Farm and Home.

Hard-Milking Cows.

There is nothing more provocative of profanity than to milk a hard-milking cow, especially if she is a kicker, as the hard milker is apt to be. Farmers who pray that they be not led into temptation ought to give more care to the kind of cows they keep for their boys and hired men to milk. It is a pretty serious business putting temptations to swear in other people's way. There is another reason why the hard-milking cow is not likely to be profitable. To easy-going people, too good tempered to be profane, the temptation takes another form, that is, not to swear at the cow, but to stop milking her before all the milk is exhausted. Thus many a cow has dried up prematurely and never given her owner any profit, while if she had been an easy milker she had the capacity to become as good a cow as any in the dairy.—American Cultivator.

Lawn or Garden Leveler.

Our illustration, which is from the American Agriculturist, shows a serviceable, home-made implement for leveling lawns and gardens, or for doing grading of any sort. It is made from a plank, beveled on one edge, the edge being protected by a strip of sheet iron. Into this is set the framework that is shown in the illustration. Ash strips can be bent easily into shape for the handles, or old plow handles can be utilized.

HOMEMADE LAND LEVELER.

A Valuable Object Lesson.

At a recent American Institute fair at New York City, the State Experiment Station made an extensive display of fruit, grown on the station grounds. There were 225 varieties of apples, each specimen having been selected as typical in shape, size, color, marking and general characteristics of the variety represented. The fruit was the result of the highest knowledge of culture and care and treatment known to the business. The collection was an object lesson in fruit lore of unmeasured value to those in search of knowledge in this special direction. This station is doing a double service in thus giving to the public exhibits of their work; first in testing the varieties and showing their merits, and second in giving an object lesson of their type and characteristics.

Storing Vegetables in Basements.

Farmers who are fortunate enough to have barn basements miss the best advantage of them if they do not use the basement to store a great variety of roots and vegetables there, and thus relieve the house cellar of the unpleasant and also unhealthful odors from stored and fermenting vegetation. It is not hard to keep a deep basement free of frost all winter. If the basement is near the surface, a bank of earth outside enclosing an air space will keep frost out. In the very coldest weather a few corn stalks thrown over vegetables or roots or some loose blankets over these will protect them sufficiently.

Hog Lice.

I have been troubled a great deal to get rid of hog lice, and the best way I have found yet, that is a success, is this: (My pigs are not troubled with them so much in the warm weather as cold): I put one-fourth kerosene oil and three-fourths water and a little sulphur, and, when I have a warm day in the winter, apply behind the ears and front legs, on the flank and root of tail. Give them a clean bed at the same time. After two or three applications I find the lice gone and nits killed. I have no hog lice now, and my herd is in the best condition it ever was.—W. H. W., in American Swineherd.

Poultry Notes.

Chopped onions are beneficial if fed to your stock occasionally.

Squabs are ready for market as soon as they are well feathered just before they leave the nest.

Provide your poultry with a warm coop and a good scratching place if you want eggs in winter.

White Wyandottes lay brown shelled eggs as a rule. They are equal to Plymouth Rocks in this respect.

In order to secure satisfactory results it is customary to mate cockerels with hens, and cocks with pullets.

Never use kerosene on the body of a fowl. Lard alone is sufficient. All greasy substances will soil the feathers.

Sheep in the Orchard.

I have five acres that is partially covered with apple trees, some of which are quite old. For several years no crops have been raised on the land. For a few weeks in the spring it is used for pasturing cows, and during a portion of the summer and fall sheep are given the run of the field. They lie under the shade of the trees a greater part of the day, where a good share of their droppings is left, which seem to be a great benefit to the trees, and all wormy and defective aples are quickly eaten as soon as they fall. I now raise more and better fruit, and believe it will pay any farmer who has an apple orchard to keep sheep.—John Jackson, in "Michigan Fruit Grower."

Corn Husks or Beds.

There is no nicer cheap mattress than can be made from dried shredded corn husks which every farmer can save while doing the fall husking. They are much cleaner and more durable than straw mattresses, and to most people more pleasant than the iron mattresses now so common, although where the bed has an iron mattress, it is likely to be the direct point at which lightning will aim when it strikes a house. We believe if farmers made more of their corn husks into mattresses, they would get well paid for their labor when people learned where they could be had.

Casting Farm Accounts.

Towards the close of each year the farmer should imitate other business men, take an account of stock, and estimate as closely as he can how he stands financially compared with previous years. Do not omit this because the account may not present so favorable a showing as you would like. Not to be willing to face facts is cowardly and unmanly, even though those facts seem greatly against us. Seed time and harvest do not fail to the farmer. He at least is sure of his living. If he be free from debt he is really the most independent citizen.

Care of Wheat in the Fall.

If the late heavy rains have left any water standing in low places on wheat fields furrows should be run through these places, to take the water off or diminish its damage. Wheat will surely be killed wherever water freezes down to the ground over it. But usually with the opening of frost the water sinks down to a lower level. If there is an underdrain near sometimes a sheet of ice will form over the water at night, and by morning all the water under it will have disappeared. In such case the wheat is benefited rather than injured.

A Cheap Bag-Holder.

We glean the following idea from the "Farmers' Advocate:" Take an inch board, three feet long by 14 inches wide, and slant it. Then take two slats, three inches wide and three feet long, and nail them upright to the board about five inches from the top, to serve as feet. Drive a wire nail through each corner of board, and turn them up a little to hook the bags on. Nail the board down at the bottom, and one man can fill and tie the bags as fast as two men can clean the grain.

Fall-Sown Lettuce.

Lettuce is so hardy that a little sown very late in fall and slightly protected in winter will get an earlier start than it can if planted then. It is best not to sow early enough to have the seed germinate in the fall, though early-sown lettuce with pretty thick covering has wintered safely in winters moderately warm, or with plenty of snow to keep the lettuce covered.

Onions, Cabbages and Flats.

"You see, it's this way," he explained to the landlord. "I don't want to seem unreasonable, and I don't want to dictate what a man shall eat. I realize, also, that you can't very well stipulate in the lease that a recognized article of food that is in good repute but bad odor practically all over the country shall not be cooked on the premises. Again, I am prepared to concede that onions and cabbages are all right in the right place, but I feel that, in justice to myself and the neighbors, I must protest that a flat building on a warm day, when the windows are open, is not the right place, especially if the day be Sunday and the time about noon. I understand perfectly that you can't do anything as matters are now, but I rely upon your support when I introduce a measure in the council regulating the use of onions and cabbages in flat buildings."—Chicago Post.

The greatest depth, writes Prof. Seeley in his "Story of the Earth," at which earthquakes are known to originate is about thirty miles. It has also been calculated that a heat sufficient to melt granite might occur at about the same depth.

Here's a Cool House.

The house of the water tubes is the remarkable building freak of a German inventor, who claims that he has solved the problem of a constant temperature that may be regulated at will, and incidentally secured a structure that combines the elements of strength, comfort and beauty.

He first put up a skeleton of his house, the frame for walls and floors being of water tubing, connected with a pumping and boiler system in the basement. Around this skeleton he put up his house in the ordinary way. The tubes were within the walls and between the floors and ceilings. In the summer time this tubing is connected with the regular water supply and a steady stream flows through the pipes in the walls and under the floors, circulating under pressure, absorbing the heat of the walls and floors as it flows. During the long and severe winter the tubing is connected with the boiler and water heated to 100 degrees forced through the circuit of pipes. The water at the outlet is found to have decreased to 40 degrees, the remaining 60 degrees having been distributed throughout the house. The speed of the circulation of water can be regulated so as to allow the fixing and maintenance of a certain temperature throughout the building.

The Constitution.

"The makers of our constitution, instructed by the experience of the colonies, by the State constitutions already adopted, and by earlier lessons from British history, found an easy agreement upon the general principle that the judicial power of the United States should be vested in a separate and independent department," writes ex-President Harrison in his "This Country of Ours" paper in the Ladies' Home Journal. "The division of powers will be made plainer by bringing together the opening sentences of the first three articles of the constitution:

"'Article 1. All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.'

"'Article 2. The executive power shall be vested in a President of the United States of America.'

"'Article 3. The judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court and in such inferior courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish.'

"Upon this threefold frame the other provisions of the constitution are hung. The limitations upon the powers of the United States courts will be more clearly understood if what has been before said in another connection is recalled here—namely, that the powers of government in this country are divided between the nation and the States upon the principle that certain powers are set off to the United States, and all other powers, save a few that are prohibited, are retained by the States. The constitution enumerates the powers which the people have given to the nation. 'The judicial power of the United States' is, therefore, such power of a judicial nature as the constitution gives to the United States—no more. The residue of the judicial power the people have reserved in the grant to the United States, and have given the whole, or such part of this reserved power as pleased them, to the State courts."

Race Track Veterans.

When the racing career of a horse is over he is seldom, if ever, heard from again. The stallions, if of good breeding, go to the stud and often become famous through their posterity, and the mares of every class go to the stock farms. Very few of the geldings are killed outright, yet a broken-down thoroughbred is about of as much use as a last year's sunbeam.

Jay Eye See may be seen nearly every day on the streets of the city where J. I. Case makes his reapers. Parole, the winner of eighty-seven races in this country and in England, is on Pierre Lorillard's place at Jobstown, N. Y.

Patrick, the property of Pat Dunne, Chicago's famous horseman, has been turned out to end his days in peace and plenty of grass on Eugene Leigh's farm.

Old Barnum, who ran until he was 16 years old, earned the title of the Iron Horse long before "Pa" Bradley's Blitzen was foaled. Barnum's last appearance in a race was at East St. Louis, where he was beaten by a lot of cheap skates, a sad end to the racing career of the conqueror of Hanover.

Lexington, Longfellow, Glenco, Bonnie Scotland and Leamington died on the farms they helped to make famous.

But to old Sunday belongs the honor of dying under saddle in the field of battle. Sunday, by Sun Dance, was a big, handsome bay horse. He was a terror in the ring for several years, until at last he outlived his usefulness and died from poison administered in an apple. In the inclosure, just at the head of the home-stretch, the old sprinter lies buried. A marble slab marks the spot, which is fenced with iron as a result of a contribution from many admirers of the old campaigner who had profited by his gameness and speed.—Boston Standard.

The Civilizing Power of Irrigation.

The evolution process of the last twenty years has brought out some very valuable lessons for the future of California. It has demonstrated that irrigation is essential to the highest standard of civilization. The census of 1890 revealed the fact that two-thirds of the gain in rural population stood to the credit of eight counties where irrigation prevailed. The counties which rely upon rainfall had about reached a standstill or scored a loss. The people have always been divided on the question as to whether irrigation is necessary. Those who oppose urge that it breeds malaria and injures the quality of the fruit. Those who favor insist that it is essential to the most scientific agriculture, and to the maintenance of dense population. The last twenty years have answered the question forever. The answer consists of a comparison between the South and the North. The one was born of the irrigation canal; the other of the mining camp and the wheat ranch. The one is characterized by a high civilization; the other by a low one.—Century.

The Deadly Stamp.

One of the newest diseases is the postage stamp tongue. The credit of discovering it is due to English physicians.

It appears that the mucilage itself is injurious, and that, further, it is an excellent cultivating medium for germs of the worst character. In the ailment called postage stamp tongue the latter is sore and covered with red spots. A bad sore throat is likely to follow if great care is not taken. Apart from the specific disease of the tongue, any contagious disease may be acquired through the medium of the mucilage.

Never lick a postage stamp with your tongue, say the physicians. It shows a great lack of cleanliness and hygienic knowledge.

Not Worth It.

Judge Walton, who presides over a court at Washington, is a man of grim humor. One time, in the lobby, a member of the bar was seeking to convey the impression to a group, of whom Judge Walton was the center, that his income from his profession was very large.

"I have to earn a good deal," the lawyer said; "it seems a large story to tell, Judge, but my personal expenses are six thousand dollars a year. It costs me that to live."

"That is too much, Brother S——," said the Judge; "I wouldn't pay it; it isn't worth it!"

Not to Be Thought Of.

Miss Marion Peck, niece of Ferdinand Peck, of Chicago, two years ago began sitting for a full length portrait to James McNeil Whistler. In all there were ninety sittings, extending over a period of two years, in London and Paris. The portrait was finished last spring, and the price, a big sum, was tendered the artist. He refused to part with the portrait, however. "What!" said he, "send this masterpiece to Chicago? No, indeed!" He has steadily refused to part with it.

Karl's Wagon.

In Germany the star group which we call the "big dipper" is known as "Karl's wagon."

The season is rapidly approaching when people lie about doing better next year.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, EDITOR,

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, FEB 19 1896

It is reported that the demand in England for skilled mechanics has become so great that young men are turning away from office work to enter factories where they can make twice the pay they would get as clerks.

It is said that there are eight thousand families in want of bread in Chicago and yet the bins of the farmers of Illinois are full of corn they cannot sell. It looks as if the links of our civilization had lost connection somewhere.

A possible effect of the India wheat famine is noted by the English trade papers. It is believed that the poverty of the people of India will result in greatly diminished exports to that country from England of cotton goods. The decreased demand for cotton goods, it is feared, will react unfavorably upon American raw material.

Little Greece may yet be the cause of a general war in Europe. The situation, as viewed by the most conservative authorities abroad, is very grave, and if King George persists in his apparent present intention it is thought that it will be impossible to avoid a conflict between the great powers. Russia, France, Germany and England are all directly interested in the matter and several of the lesser powers may be drawn into trouble if hostilities once commence.

The outlook for a prosperous farming season throughout the State has not been so favorable in many years as at present. From all sections of the country reports continue to come in of the large acreage sown to grain and its phenominal growth. The abundant rains and the long continued spell of warm weather have combined to produce an excellent prospect for an abnormally large cereal yield and unless some unforseen conditions arise the promise will be fulfilled.

After all the evidence that has been submitted relative to the disgraceful looting of the Treasury by Chief Clerk Duckworth, at the request, or rather demand, of the Assemblymen whose support he wanted in his fight for re-election as chief clerk, that guilty officer still holds his place and the men who are equally guilty are making laws for the State of California. One of the unneccessary attaches has been fired, but it happened to be one who had promised to divide his salary with some other hanger-on and afterwards refused to keep his word. The action of the Assembly in shielding Duckworth makes the scandal one that the Republican party must defend.

The determination of the Greeks to protect the Cretans from Turkish misrule and massacre brings Europe close to the verge of a general war. When the battle is once begun between the Turks and the Greeks it will be almost impossible to confine it to those countries. The conditions have long been such in the Levant that a war begun any where is as likely as not to spread throughout the whole region as a fire started by a match in a field of dry stubble would be likely to sweep all before it ere it could be extinguished.

Senator Perkins declares himself to be opposed to the ratification of the Arbitration treaty with Great Britain because the final arbitrator, King Oscar of Sweden and Norway, is "bound to decide in favor of England in any case that might come before him." Senator Perkins is pre-eminently right. His sturdy Americanism upon that point is in marked contrast to the shameless sycophancy of the anglomaniac press and people of New York, who would cheerfully sacrifice national prestige and honor rather than offend the scheming Britisher by repudiating a treaty which is nothing more nor less than a skilful bunko game of diplomacy by that greatest of all confidence men, John Bull.

Senator Walcott's mission to Europe to enlist the support of the leading nations in the interest of bimetallism is not a pronounced success. In France he was told that no matter how the people there might favor bimetallism they could do nothing until England and Germany had given their consent. So it seems that the United States is not the only country dependent upon the sweet will of her British majesty for a financial policy. It would be against the best interests of the men of Lombard street who control the money of the world to consent to the coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and they are not going to do it. Senator Walcott is wasting his time in trying to induce the money-bags of Europe to consent to any policy that will loosen their hold upon the producers of the world.

There appears to have been at least one American at the banquet given by Ambassador Bayard to the Prince of Wales and English nobility. It was Consul-General Collins. He heard so much praise of England and so little reference to America that he became disgusted with the whole affair. When called upon to speak for his own country he did so by good-naturedly criticising England and in doing so gave some good home thrusts. Among other things, he said: "You Englishmen have so much time at your disposal as to be able to devote much of it to the regulation of the affairs of other countries. You hold your meetings, appoint your committees, and denounce negro lynchings in America, yet you kill more negroes monthly in Africa than we have done in our history." It is refreshing to hear of one stalwart American representing this country at the court of James.

Next Monday will be a legal holiday—Washington's Birthdoy.

James Conners of Tinnemaha was a visitor in town this week.

A social dance will be given at Mairs' Hall this evening to which all are invited.

Bar No. 28 was shipped from the Reward this week. It was valued at about $1,500.

Mrs. A. O. Collins is visiting with her daughter, Mrs. B. Rhine, at Independence.

Miss Mabel Chalfant of Bishop was a guest of Miss Lena Thompson at Sunnyside during the week.

H. L. Childs, a former well-known resident of Inyo and Mono counties, is a member of the Montana legislature this winter.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. McKenzie and Miss Trixie Boland came up from Lone Pine last Saturday and attended the masonic open installation.

N. D. Moore, the expert who lately examined the Ubaheba copper mines, is expected to arrive here by the next stage. He is at present at Randsburg.

The total amount of bullion produced in Bodie and vicinity during the year 1896 and shipped through Wells, Fargo & Co.'s express was $441,069.34.

Mrs. E. M. Johnson returned to Los Angeles last Monday evening. She had spent the last six months at Independence looking after her real estate interests here.

W. F. Matlack and family left for Los Angeles last Monday evening. They expect to spend about a month visiting at the southern metropolis and the surrounding country.

H. C. Keyes, the Stockton insurance man, went to Keeler on Monday's train and came up to Independence Tuesday by private conveyance. He left for Bishop Wednesday.

The Nevada State Senate has passed a bill authorizing the destruction of all wild or unbranded horses, mares or colts over the age of six months running at large on the public lands of that State.

Messrs. Sneden and Vermilyea came down from Bishop last Saturday, returning next day. The two gentlemen have gone into the law business together under the firm name of Sneden & Vermilyea.

Rudolph Schober came down from Bishop last Monday with 18 animals and three wagons. He will load ten tons of hay at Lone Pine for Fred Holbert to be fed on the road to the cattle Mr. Holbert is driving to Mojave.

Dr. Haskell came down from Hawthorne on Wednesday's train and expects to return to-morrow. He came down for the purpose of attending W. J. Ryan, the Denver mining man, who is at the Norman House. Mr. Ryan is suffering from a severe attack of the grip.

Assemblyman Emmons has introduced a bill limiting to seven the number of claims to be made by any one person or corporation or association in any one district in any one year, and to fourteen claims in one year in a county embracing more than one mining district.

The tiny folks of town were entertained last Friday evening by Mrs. D. J. Hession. Over thirty little people aged from four to ten years made the house hum until nearly ten o'clock. Masters Jesse and James Hession assisted their mother in receiving and entertaining their guests.

F. W. Holbert left town on Tuesday with a band of about five hundred head of stock cattle for San Jose. The animals will be driven to a point on the Southern Pacific near Mojave and Mr. Holbert will probably ship them to their destination from there. It is reported that he paid an average price of twelve dollars per head for the lot.

Last Friday evening the young friends of Misses Edna and Lizzie Matlack gave them a farewell party. That the girls are very popular was shown by the large crowd present. Games, music, dancing and eating were enjoyed until after midnight when goodnights were said and all departed, wishing that the Matlack family would return soon, in order that their friends might give them a welcome home party.

Masonic Banquet.

Last Saturday evening the regular meeting of Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M. was followed by an open installation of officers and a banquet. The public interest in the ceremony was evidenced by the fact that nearly every family in town was represented at the gathering. District Inspector A. O. Collins of Bishop installed the following officers in a most impressive manner: J. A. McKenzie, W. M.; J. S. Gorman, S. W.; B. Rhine, J. W.; O. I. Mairs, Treas.; Irv. H. Mulholland, Sec.; T. C. Boland, S. D.; J. D. Mairs, J. D.; G. W. Brady, Tyler. Mr. Collins impressed each officer with the duties of his position and admonished him to perform those duties as became a member of so high and ancient an order and presented him with the jewel of his office. Immediately following the installation a banquet was announced and all who had viewed the ceremony were cordially invited to join in partaking of a bountiful supper. This was enjoyed to the utmost by young and old and the culinary efforts of a number of the ladies of Independence were well sampled by all present. At the instigation of the young people most of the banqueters repaired to Mairs' Hall where music had been provided and where all hands—or rather all feet—took part in one of the merriest hops of the season. Independence certainly deserves as much credit as any town in the State for the unanimity with which its people enter into any such jollification. Every one was bent on having a good time and in helping his neighbor have one, and the effort was most successful.

Another Cutting Scrape.

Last Monday night a drunken row took place between Indians near Lone Pine and resulted in one of them receiving eight wounds in the back, two in the breast and his left ear severed from the head. Word was brought to Sheriff Given that a man had been killed and late that night he succeeded in capturing the knife wielder, an Indian known as Ted Birchim, and he now occupies quarters in the county jail. The "dead" man rode into town next day and was examined by Dr. Blair. At last account the hope entertained that he would become a "good" Indian were dissipated; he will live. It is claimed that the traffic in whisky with the Indians is growing to an alarming extent about Lone Pine but so far the officers have been unable to obtain sufficient evidence to secure a conviction.

Held to Answer.

Frank Elijah was arrested during the week on a complaint sworn to by Chas. Summers, charging him with having killed a beef belonging to O. I. Mairs. A preliminary examination was held before Justice Dunlap at Bishop yesterday and the defendant held for trial in the Superior Court and admitted to bail in the sum of one thousand dollars. The prosecution was conducted by District Attorney Forbes and the defense by Mr. Vermilyea. The testimony was taken by Ernest Laird and will be transcribed for use in the Superior Court. The defendant is a well-to-do young farmer living about eight miles south of Bishop.

Copper Mines Bonded.

W. J. Ryan of Denver has bonded from Mairs and Welch the group of copper mines owned by the latter parties at Ubaheba, the agreement being filed with the County Recorder this morning. The purchase price is $15,000, to be paid in installments; by the terms of the agreement Mr. Ryan must begin work on the properties within thirty days from March 1st and continue to develop the same "in a miner-like fashion," and should such work cease at any time for a period of sixty days the bond is forfeited. On a recent visit to the mines Mr. Ryan sampled them thoroughly and it is confidently expected that a valuable property will be developed.

Board of Education.

The county Board of Education met at Independence last Monday, all the members being present as follows: Supt. S. W. Austin, H. C. Hampton, Geo. Willis, Miss Maud Truscott and Mrs. B Rhine. There were three applicants for examination, Arthur Shirley and Miss Mabel Bradshaw of Bishop and Harry Floyd of London. Miss Bradshaw failed in her test studies and the others continued. Mr. Shirley will undoubtedly pass.

Another storm set in Wednesday morning and still continues. A little snow fell in the Valley, but rain soon set in. More snow has fallen in the Sierras than for several years past.

Cyrus Wheeler, a Los Angeles mining man, arrived at Independence yesterday. Mr. Wheeler is interested in the Wibbelt mine at Slate Range, and is here for the purpose of looking up the title to the property.

See the list of patents published this week, and if any of them are for lands owned by you, send for them and have them recorded. The U. S. patent is the basis of all abstracts of title, and until it is recorded no abstract can be complete.

I have given Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children.—Geo. E. Wolff, Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla. Sold by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited,

C. A. WALTER,
Independence, Cal.

The Salt Bush.

Superintendent Garey reports that his experiment with the Australian salt bush on alkali lands in the parks has been most successful. At the east corner of Westlake park is a plat of ground which could not be utilized on account of its aridity and the alkali in the soil. He procured a few Australian salt plants and set them out last June in this ground. They have not had the slightest attention or water, but now cover the whole surface of the ground with a nutritious gaeen stock food, much resembling alfalfa. The plant grows as a runner along the ground, and one plant will cover 500 square feet in a year. It dries, losing three-fourths of its weight. All kinds of stock eat it, and twenty tons of green food per acre can be obtained on an average crop from alkali lands. It is self feeding, grows from eight to ten inches high, and can be repeatedly cut without injury. It appears to do best on alkali soils, and in a few seasons completely destroys the alkali in the soil, leaving it fit for other crops. The plant can be easily eradicated by ploughing under.—*L. A. Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Frederickstown Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhœa for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time when he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

HOW TO RELAX.

Cold weather, whether damp or dry, will produce, even if we are extremely careful, sudden soreness and stiffness of the limbs and muscles. This is much owing to sudden change of temperature from a warm room to out-door air. Cold contracts and warmth expands or relaxes, and it is for this reason that when one is sore and stiff from sudden cold, the application of St. Jacobs Oil brings immediate and sure relief, as it gives warmth and relaxation to the stiffened muscles and makes supple the sore and cramped limbs. With a vigorous rubbing with this great remedy for pain, no one need suffer with soreness and stiffness more than a very short time. It is especially the best remedy for suffering where we require a prompt cure, and it is particularly the best because its cures are permanent.

Scrofula

Is a deep-seated blood disease which all the mineral mixtures in the world cannot cure. S.S.S. (guaranteed purely vegetable) is a real blood remedy for blood diseases and has no equal.

Mrs. Y. T. Buck, of Delaney, Ark., had Scrofula for twenty-five years and most of the time was under the care of the doctors who could not relieve her. A specialist said he could cure her, but he filled her with arsenic and potash which almost ruined her constitution. She then took nearly every so-called blood medicine and drank them by the wholesale, but they did not reach her trouble. Some one advised her to try S.S.S. and she very soon found that she had a real blood remedy at last. She says: "After taking one dozen bottles of S.S.S. I am perfectly well, my skin is clear and healthy and I would not be in my former condition for two thousand dollars. Instead of drying up the poison in my system, like the potash and arsenic, S.S.S. drove the disease out through the skin, and I was permanently rid of it."

A Real Blood Remedy.

S.S.S. never fails to cure Scrofula, Eczema, Rheumatism Contagious Blood Poison, or any disorder of the blood. Do not rely upon a simple tonic to cure a deep-seated blood disease, but take a real blood remedy.

THE SLAPPING SAL

By CONAN DOYLE.

[Copyright, 1894, by the Author.]

It was in the days when France's power was already broken upon the seas and when more of her three deckers lay rotting in the Medway than were to be found in Brest harbor. But her frigates and corvets still scoured the ocean, closely followed ever by those of her rival. At the uppermost ends of the earth these dainty vessels, with sweet names of girls or of flowers, mangled and shattered each other for the honor of the four yards of bunting that flapped from their gaffs. It had blown hard in the night, but the wind had dropped with the dawning, and now the rising sun tinted the fringe of the storm wrack as it dwindled into the west and glinted on the endless chests of the log green waves. To north and south and west lay a skyline which was unbroken save by the spout of foam when two of the great Atlantic seas dashed each other into spray. To the east was a rocky island, jutting out into craggy points, with a few scattered clumps of palm trees and a pennant of mist streaming out from the bare conical hill which capped it.

The captain sprang up on the bulwarks.

A heavy surf beat upon the shore, and at a safe distance from it the British 32 gun frigate Leda, Captain A. P. Johnson, raised her black, glistening side upon the crest of a wave or swooped down into an emerald valley, dipping away to the nor'ard under easy sail. On her snow white quarter deck stood a stiff little brown faced man, who swept the horizon with his glass.

"Mr. Wharton," he cried, with a voice like a rusty hinge.

A thin, knockkneed officer shambled across the poop to him.

"Yes, sir."

"I've opened the sealed orders, Mr. Wharton."

A glimmer of curiosity shone upon the meager features of the first lieutenant. The Leda had sailed with her consort, the Dido, from Antigua the week before, and the admiral's orders had been contained in a sealed envelope.

"We were to open them on reaching the deserted island of Sombriero, lying in north latitude 18:36, west longitude 63.28. Sombriero bore four miles to the northeast from our port bow when the gale cleared, Mr. Wharton."

The lieutenant bowed stiffly. He and the captain had been bosom friends from childhood. They had gone to school together, joined the navy together, fought again and again together and married into each other's families, but as long as their feet were on the poop the iron discipline of the service struck all that was human out of them and left only the superior and the subordinate. Captain Johnson took a blue paper from his pocket, which crackled as he unfolded it.

The 32 gun frigates Leda and Dido, Captains A. P. Johnson and James Munro are to cruise from the point at which these instructions are read to the mouth of the Caribbean sea in the hope of encountering the French frigate La Gloire (48), which has recently harassed our merchant ships in that quarter. H. M. frigates are also directed to hunt down the piratical craft known sometimes as the Slapping Sal and sometimes as the Hairy Hudson, which has plundered the British ships as per margin, inflicting barbarities upon their crews. She is a small brig carrying 10 light guns, with one 24 pound carronade forward. She was last seen on the 25 ult. to the northeast of the island of Sombriero.

JAMES MONTGOMERY, Rear Admiral.
H. M. S. Colossus, Antigua.

"We appear to have lost our consort," said Captain Johnson, folding up his instructions and again sweeping the horizon with his glass. "She drew away after we reefed down. It would be a pity if we met this heavy Frenchman without the Dido, Mr. Wharton, eh?"

The lieutenant twinkled and smiled.

"She has 18 pounders on the main and twelves on the poop, sir," said the captain. "She carries 400 to our 231. Captain de Milon is the smartest man in the French service. Oh, Bobby, boy, I'd give my hopes of my flag to rub my side up against her!" He turned on his heel, ashamed of his momentary lapse. "Mr. Wharton," said he, looking back sternly over his shoulder, "get those square sails shaken out and bear away a point more to the west."

"A brig on the port bow," came a voice from the forecastle.

"A brig on the port bow," said the lieutenant.

The captain sprang up on the bulwarks and held on by the mizzen shrouds, a strange little figure with flying skirts and puckered eyes. The lean lieutenant craned his neck and whispered to Smeaton, the second, while officers and men came popping up from below and clustered along the weather rail, shading their eyes with their hands, for the tropical sun was already clear of the palm trees. The strange brig lay at anchor in the throat of a curving estuary, and it was already obvious that she could not get out without passing under the guns of the frigate. A long rocky point to the north of her held her in.

"Keep her as she goes, Mr. Wharton," said the captain. "Hardly worth clearing for action, Mr. Smeaton, but the men can stand by the guns in case she tries to pass us. Cast loose the bowchasers and send the small arm men onto the forecastle."

A British crew went to its quarters in those days with the quiet serenity of men on their daily routine. In a few minutes, without fuss or sound, the sailors were knotted round their guns, the marines were drawn up and leaning on their muskets, and the frigate's bowsprit pointed straight for her little victim.

"Is it the Slapping Sal, sir?"

"I have no doubt of it, Mr. Wharton."

"They don't seem to like the looks of us, sir. They've cut their cable and are clapping on sail."

It was evident that the brig meant struggling for her freedom. One little patch of canvas fluttered out above another, and her people could be seen working like madmen in the rigging. She made no attempt to pass her antagonist, but headed up the estuary. The captain rubbed his hands.

"She's making for shoal water, Mr. Wharton, and we shall have to cut her out, sir. She's a footy little brig, but I should have thought a fore and after would have been more handy."

"It was a mutiny, sir."

"Ah, indeed!"

"Yes, sir. I heard of it at Manilla. A bad business, sir. Captain and two mates murdered. This Hudson, or Hairy Hudson, as they call him, led the mutiny. He's a Londoner, sir, but a cruel villain as ever walked."

"His next walk will be to Execution dock, Mr. Wharton. She seems heavily manned. I wish I could take 20 topmen out of her, but they would be enough to corrupt the crew of the ark, Mr. Wharton."

Both officers were looking through their glasses at the brig. Suddenly the lieutenant showed his teeth in a grin, while the captain flushed to a deeper red.

"That's Hairy Hudson on the afterrail, sir."

"The low, impertinent blackguard! He'll play some other antics before we are done with him. Could you reach him with the long 18, Mr. Smeaton?"

"Another cable length will do it, sir."

The brig yawed as they spoke, and as she came round a spurt of smoke whiffed out from her quarter. It was a pure piece of bravado, for the gun could scarce carry half way. Then with a jaunty swing the little ship came into the wind again and shot round a fresh curve of the winding channel.

"The water shoaling rapidly, sir," reported the second lieutenant.

"There's six fathoms by the chart."

"Four by the lead, sir."

"When we clear this point, we shall see how we lie. Ha, I thought as much! Lay her to, Mr. Wharton. Now we have got her at our mercy."

The frigate was quite out of sight of the sea now at the head of this river-like estuary. As she came round the curve the two shores were seen to converge at a point about a mile distant. In the angle, as near shore as she could get, the brig was lying, with her broadside toward her pursuer and a wisp of black cloth streaming from her mizzen. The lean lieutenant, who had reappeared upon deck with a cutlass strapped to his side and two pistols rammed into his belt, peered curiously at the ensign.

"Is it the Jolly Roger, sir?" he asked.

But the captain was furious. "He may hang where his breeches are hanging before I have done with him," said he. "What boats will you want, Mr. Wharton?"

"We should do it with the launch and the jollyboat."

"Take four and make a clean job of it. Pipe away the crews at once, and I'll work her in and help you with the long eighteens."

With a rattle of ropes and a creaking of blocks the four boats splashed into the water. Their crews clustered thickly into them—barefooted sailors, stolid marines, laughing middies and in the sheets of each the senior officers, with their stern, schoolmaster faces. The captain, his elbows on the binnacle, still watched the distant brig. Her crew were tricing up the boarding netting, dragging round the starboard guns, knocking new portholes for them and making every preparation for a desperate resistance. In the thick of it all a huge man, bearded to the eyes, with a red nightcap upon his head, was straining and stooping and hauling. The captain watched him with a sour smile, and then snapping up his glass he turned upon his heel. For an instant he stood staring

"Stand by to repel boarders!"

Arrested the Sovereign.

Among the gentlemen engaged in the sport of pigeon shooting at Heiligendamm, a fashionable resort on the Baltic, who were arrested at the instigation of the Society For Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, was one who gave his name as Graf von Schwerin. Later the police discovered that he was none other than their sovereign, the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, who was staying there incognito.

A Witty Forlornity.

A forlorn looking man said: "I've tried everything that I could turn my hand to, but couldn't make anything answer, and now I have decided to go up among the hills, where they say there's a wonderful echo, to see if I can make that answer."—New York Advertiser.

Doubtful.

"Shall I say au revoir, and not good-by?" he whispered soulfully.

Her long lashes swept her damask cheek.

"I hardly know," she faltered. "Your French is pretty rank, but"——Detroit Tribune.

In 1803 Bombay was visited by a fire which destroyed buildings to the value of $3,000,000. The Indians regarded the visitation as a mark of the anger of the god Siva the Destroyer, and penetential offerings were made while the fire was in progress to stay his vengeful hand.

The name wheat is derived from a Saxon word, "hwaete," signifying white, because the flour from this grain is lighter in color than that from any other.

THE ROMANCE OF A PICTURE.

Meissonier's Favorite Painting Rescued from a German.

William A. Coffin, in a paper entitled "Souvenirs of a Veteran Collector" in the Century, describes the unique art treasures of Mr. Samuel P. Avery, of New York. Mr. Coffin relates the following story of one of Meissonier's most famous paintings:

The picture shows Marshal Saxe, with a body of troops, interrogating a peasant at a crossroads in the forest, and taking notes. In 1880 Mr. William H. Vanderbilt was sitting to Meissonier for his portrait, and Mr. Avery and Mr. Lucas were invited by the artist to come to his studio during the sittings, as Mr. Vanderbilt did not speak French. One day Mr. Vanderbilt asked, "What picture does M. Meissonier think is the best he ever painted?" Meissonier, replying through Mr. Lucas, spoke of two, the celebrated "1814" and "Le Renseignement." The latter picture, he said, with a sigh and a deeply felt "helas!" was in Germany, in the hands of the enemies of France.

It had been painted for the Exposition of 1867, and was bought by M. Petit, who asked fifty thousand francs for it. Mr. Walters had offered forty-five thousand francs, but a German banker in Paris, M. Mayer, paid the price and got the picture. He was a well-known collector, and his family home was in Dresden. When the war of 1870 broke out, M. Mayer left Paris, and took the picture with him. Mr. Avery had seen his gallery every time he went to Dresden, and knew the picture. The conversation in the studio continued, and Avery and Lucas agreed that "Le Renseignement" was, indeed, a wonderful canvas. Petit had tried to buy it back, but could not get it. It was thought it would be impossible to get Mayer to sell it, but Avery, authorized by Mr. Vanderbilt, resolved to try. He did not wish to make a trip to Dresden at the time, so he wrote to Mayer that a friend of his wanted the picture, but not as a matter of business. It was not to buy to sell again. The banker replied that he had been often importuned to sell the picture, but had invariably refused; yet, now that he felt himself growing old (he had then reached the age of 80), and that as after his death his family might not care to keep it, he would take a certain price for it. He added that he might change his mind over night, for he found it hard to decide to sell. Avery lost no time in telegraphing, and the next day received the canvas by parcels post; the marvelous picture was actually in his room in the hotel! A draft on London was sent to Dresden at once, and the deed was done.

Mr. Vanderbilt and his two fellow-conspirators now set about arranging a surprise for Meissonier. The next day was to be the last sitting for the portrait, and when they arrived at the studio one of them carried a parcel, which was placed in a safe corner. The sitting proceeded, and at last Meissonier said the portrait was finished; there was not another touch to be added. "Now you may see me sign," he announced, and the act was accomplished with a due observance on the part of the company of the importance of the moment. The artist then went into another room to put the little portrait in a frame he had ready for it. "Le Renseignement" was quickly taken from the corner, set in a frame on the easel, and the three men stood by to see what Meissonier would do. "When he came in and suddenly saw the picture," says Mr. Avery, "he almost went crazy in his joy. He got down on his knees before it so that he could look at it closely, and cried out, 'Oh, mon bon tableau! Oh, mon bon tableau!' and with difficulty found words to express his delight. He loved his picture that he never expected to see again, and his heart was full."

Road to Knowledge.

"Every one who has the reading habit—and everybody reads—has one of two objects in view: to acquire information or to experience a mental pleasure," writes "Droch" in his "Literary Talks" in the Ladies' Home Journal. "No matter how inferior the book read, when you sat down to read you intended to learn something new, or 'to kill time,' which is a colloquial way of saying that you wanted to turn your mind into pleasant channels. There is a certain type of mind that only gets pleasure out of reading when at the same time it is getting knowledge. That kind is the exception, and it reaches full satisfaction only by becoming what we call a scholar. For the mind seeking knowledge by reading the signboards are many in these days, and, instead of the way being narrow and arduous, there is no other highway in life quite so carefully marked out as the road to knowledge. In many little towns and crossroads the State has marked the entrance to it with a schoolhouse which is free to everybody. And from there up through the high school and the normal school to the college, the State lavishes money, and rich men and churches give millions to make the way plain and easy. In no other line of effort can so much be had for nothing as in the acquisition of knowledge. Even for those whose time is limited by the necessities of bread-earning, there are Chautauqua circles and University Extension societies. The world was never so kind to the inquiring mind as it is to-day."

The Great Khan of Tartary.

The personal appearance of the Great Khan, as described by Marco, was as follows: "He is of good stature, neither tall nor short, but of middle height. He has a becoming amount of flesh, and is very shapely in all his limbs. His complexion is white and red, the eyes black and fine, the nose well formed and well set on." But the portrait of Kublai Khan, drawn by a Chinese artist, does not exactly correspond with the pen portrait given here by Marco. We know also, from Marco's own narrative, that the Emperor was subject to gout in his later life, and we are led to infer that he was rather corpulent, as he is represented in the drawing given by the Chinese artist.—St. Nicholas.

Cross as a Signature.

The cross mark, still used occasionally instead of a signature, did not originate in ignorance. It was always appended to signatures in medieval times as an attestation of good faith.

A Happy Couple.

'Squire Moore and His Estimable Wife Interest a Reporter.

From Tribune, Greeley, Colorado.

Among the many good people residing in Greeley, Colorado, 'Squire Moore and his amiable wife are the best known and the most respected. This happy couple were born in West Riding, of York, England, in 1820. In 1848 they emigrated to this country and settled in Derby, Conn., where they reside dfor a number of years While there Mr. Moore, who was highly respected by his neighbors, was elected a member of the State Legislature in 1867.

A reporter called on them recently and was received cordially and in response to his inquiries, Mrs. Moore said: "For four years I was miserable; hardly a week passed during that time but what I suffered from extreme lassitude. The least exertion fatigued me. At times, when I was sewing or reading, I would be troubled with tingling sensations, like the pricking of pins in hands, feet, arms and legs. Occasionally I would suffer from profuse perspiration, the water fairly running from my face and hands. Then for days it would seem impossible for me to enjoy a minute of warmth. I would sit in a rocking-chair alongside a roaring fire in the stove, wrapped up in blankets, yet, while my face would be scorched, the rest of my body would be chilled.

"Finally, despite my opposition, my husband called in a physician, who attributed my ailment to rheumatism and prescribed for that complaint. A day or two afterwards he changed his opinion, saying I was attacked with la grippe; also changed his medicine, but to no purpose. I was going from bad to worse. The tingling sensations were resumed. At times I would be incapable of doing anything with my hands, and my husband was fearful that I was suffering from partial paralysis.

"One evening, while reading the New York Tribune, he read to me a statement of a wonderful cure perfected by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He and I had at times read similar testimonials describing the great powers and virtue of these pills. But this night in particular, I was impressed with what he read and told him it wouldn't do any harm to try a box. The next morning he purchased a box of the Pink Pills and I commenced taking them according to directions, three times a day. Within a week I felt better, and when I had finished that box I asked my husband to get me another and he laughingly complied, saying, 'conceit is as bad as consumption, but even if you think they are doing you some good there is a great relief experienced.' After that he purchased for me about a dozen more boxes, and for nearly two years I continued taking them. The result was I regained my strength, the tingling in arms and legs, hands and feet ceased, and the frequent sweats which I had been subject to left me. In all truth, I am forced to state that the Pink Pills made a new woman of me. "That is," she laughingly remarked, "as new as you can make a woman who is now in her seventy-sixth year." And, in truth, Mrs. Moore's closing remarks are well founded, for she is as hale and healthy looking as any woman could be who has lived her great age.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

No Mule Aboard.

A correspondent asks, "To decide a bet will you please state in the river column whether there was a mule on the ark or not?"

No, sir. Nary a mule. When Captain Noah built the ark as a high water packet in the Ararat trade and he went into the menagerie business, he found that he was a "mule out" just as he got ready to leave on his maiden trip. He went ashore, and after looking around found a mule and would have made his animal show complete if he had been able to get him aboard the boat. Not being able to find a negro who would twist his tail and make him get aboard by walking the gangplank, and after trying to get his deck crew to coax, shove, lead or carry the mule aboard, he got mad, rung the bell, backed out and lit out for Ararat, leaving the mule a lonely, friendless beast until he was discovered by a negro. The two have been fast friends ever since.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE BRIGHT LITTLE GIRL.

Her blue eyes they beam and they twinkle,
Her lips have made smiling more fair;
On cheek and on brow there's no wrinkle,
But thousands of curls in her hair.

She's little—you don't wish her taller;
Just half through the teens is her age;
And baby or lady to call her
Were something to puzzle a sage!

Her walk is far better than dancing;
She speaks as another might sing;
And all by an innocent chancing
Like lambkins and birds in the spring.

Unskilled in the airs of the city,
She's perfect in natural grace;
She's gentle, and truthful, and witty,
And ne'er spends a thought on her face.

Her face, with the fine glow that's in it,
As fresh as an apple tree bloom—
And, O, when she comes, in a minute,
Like sunbeams, she brightens the room.

As taking in mind as in feature,
How many will sigh for her sake!
I wonder, the sweet little creature,
What sort of a wife she would make.
—William Allingham, in New York Herald.

On the eve of visiting her city cousins the little village beauty, Mamie Stevens, made elaborate preparations. She did not want them to think her countrified and was even tempted to bleach her brown hair yellow because the town politician's wife said it was the proper thing among the "Upper Ten" in the city.

The twin cousins went with their father to the station on the day Mamie was expected.

While they stood there arm in arm, eagerly watching the travelers as they filed past them, Grace exclaimed in a low tone:

"Oh, Gertie, look at that dreadful girl!"

The next moment the "dreadful girl" came up to them and said, with easy self-possession:

"Isn't this Uncle Will and the girls?"

Grace and Gertrude managed to murmur some words of welcome and then they took their seats in the carriage and were driven home in horrified silence. Having arrived, they left their mother to look after their guest and fled to their own room, where Grace threw herself upon the bed and gave way to tears.

"Oh, it's too bad!" she moaned. "And to think I was afraid of her being countrified! Why, the greenest country girl that ever lived would be better than this!"

"And she is here for the winter!" cried Gertie, wringing her hands. "What are we going to do? I should be ashamed to be seen in public with her!"

"Uncle Will" had escaped to the office as soon as possible, but Mrs. Stevens could not escape. In sore perplexity she attended to the wants of her young guest, and was as courteous as possible, but she was secretly filled with dismay. In very truth, what were they to do with her?

At lunch the mother and the daughters were conscious of the look of well-bred surprise on the faces of the servants, but Mamie talked and laughed, and felt that she was making a fine impression on her relatives. When she retired that night a satisfied smile was on her pretty face.

"I think I have shown them that we are not quite out of the world, if we do live in a little town," said she.

The next morning she came down in all the glory of her new silk dress, and greeted her cousins with:

"Well, I am ready to start on my round of sight-seeing this morning."

"But not in that dress!" exclaimed Grace, in spite of her mother's warning look.

"This dress? Oh, certainly! This is my street dress," Mamie replied, with airy complacency, willing to show them that she could afford nice things as well as they.

"Isn't it too bad?" cried Gertrude, tearfully, when they went to their own room to prepare for their outing. "And just think how quiet mamma has always kept us and how she has never allowed us to associate with girls that made themselves conspicuous!"

"Be patient, girls," said the mother, with an attempt at comfort. "She seems to be a bright girl; perhaps she may soon discover that she is not showing good taste."

So the girls went with their cousin, and devoted themselves to her entertainment, but it cannot be said that the experiment was a successful one. Wherever they went people cast looks of surprise and amusement at Mamie. In their sensitive condition the sisters noticed these things with unusual quickness, and perhaps gave them undue prominence. They had worked themselves up to a nervous watchfulness, and when they were passing through one of the parks and saw a group of their schoolgirl friends approaching as though to speak to them, with a horrified glance at each other they turned sharply down a by-path, not quickly enough, however, to avoid hearing one of the group say:

"Who can that be with Grace and Gertie?"

"Looks rather 'freaky,' doesn't she? Where do you suppose they picked her up?" came to them in the clear, high tones of Fannie McGregor, the sarcastic girl, whom the whole school disliked and feared.

Mamie had been watching the swans, and the sharp speeches had fallen on deaf ears. She could not understand why the sisters hurried home at such a rate when she was in the midst of her pleasure. She wrote to her mother that night:

"Grace and Gertie are nice-looking girls, but awfully prim and dull and not at all stylish. I dress a great deal better than they do myself."

* * * * * * * * *

For an entire week the sisters took their cousin here and there, doing their best as hostesses to entertain their guest; but at the end of that time they rebelled.

"I can't endure it any longer," Grace cried, throwing herself on the floor at her mother's side and leaning her head against the motherly knee. "There's no hope of its getting any better, mamma. Gertie and I are worn out. What do you think she did with that pretty, simple dress you bought her? Put it away in her trunk and wore that dreadful, loud-looking silk into the streets again! When I asked her why she didn't wear the new dress he said: 'Oh, that's so plain; I shall wear it about the house.'"

"That's just the trouble," said the quieter Gertrude; "she's so satisfied with herself. She rather looks down on us, I think. She asked me yesterday if we ever went into 'sure-enough' society.'"

They all laughed, but Grace grew sober presently and her cheeks reddened.

"What shall we do?" the girls asked of their mother, and "what shall we do?" the mother asked of her husband, and no one seemed able to answer. Mrs. Stevens felt a delicacy in talking to the foolish girl, because she was her husband's niece and not her own. Mr. Stevens was a man who shirked unpleasant things, and this was certainly unpleasant.

"And yet I don't like to have the girls go around with her," he said. "Somebody ought to talk to her. Suppose we send for aunt Rebecca?"

"Oh, Will, the very thing!" cried his wife; so aunt Rebecca was sent for and came.

Nobody told aunt Rebecca anything, but the bright, sharp, little old woman, sitting in the chimney corner with her knitting, found out everything there was to be learned in less than two days, and within a very few hours had the opportunity she wanted. Mamie was left alone with her.

"It is easy to see that you rule your mother, Mary," she said, with a sharp glance up over her glistening spectacles. 'Jane Stevens could always be pulled around in leading strings by anybody that chose to take the trouble, and I reckon you've got her under pretty good control."

"Why, aunt Rebecca! What makes you think that?" cried the astonished girl.

"Why, your mother's a lady, my dear," said the merciless old woman, "and if she'd had her way she'd a-sent you out looking like a lady."

"I always look like a lady!" exclaimed Mamie, the blood rushing to her cheeks, and she rose to leave the room.

"Sit right down there, Mary," said the old lady. "I've got a lot of things to say, an' I might as well say 'em right now. No, you don't look like a lady with that flashy silk on, and those high-heeled boots, an' your hair all faded out as it is. A lady-like young girl won't dress in things that'll make people stare at her. If you'll open your eyes you'll see your cousins don't fix themselves that way, an' I guess their mother is a pretty good judge of what's best for girls."

"I consider myself just as good as Grace and Gertie!" said Mamie, with an angry toss of her head.

"That's just the trouble with you, Mary," retorted the pitiless old lady; "you think too well of yourself. You've come up here thinking you are very fine and stylish, and trying to ape city manners the best you know how. What a pity you've caught up only loud and flashy things instead of things that are really lady-like. Can't you see how different these girls are? Can't you see that they don't like to go out with you because you attract a kind of attention no young girl should want?"

Mamie started up again in a passion of weeping and tried to escape from the corner where the old lady had her fenced in.

"Let me get out!" she cried, stormily. "I am going straight home! I won't stay here another day!"

"Well, Mary," said the old lady, deliberately, "you can't get off before 3 o'clock, anyway, and I'd think it over a little. This visit should be a great thing for you, but you'll have to take a new start. Sure-enough nice people don't like 'made-up' girls. They may overlook a great deal of 'put-on' in society women, but they like young girls to be simple and modest. Go and think it over, now, Mary. You've got plenty of sense, if you'll only use it, and you can see for yourself that you're mightily out of place in a house like this."

The little old woman went on with her knitting as complacently as though she had been having the most pleasant conversation in the world, while Mamie flew to her room and locked herself in.

What were her thoughts there, what her anger and mortification, what dreadful battle she fought with herself, no one knew. Two hours afterward aunt Rebecca saw her slip out of the house, and the old lady's eyes sparkled when she noticed that Mamie wore the pretty, simple gown that Mrs. Stevens had given her.

After a while there was her step in the hall, and she came quietly in swinging her hat by its ribbons. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes sparkling, and they sparkled still more at aunt Rebecca's cry of surprise.

"Yes; I've been to the hair-dresser's," she said, "and he said the only help for my hair was to cut it all off, and I would be all right in a month or two so I had it cut. And I'm going to begin over again! Aunt Rebecca—I really am I've been awfully conceited, I know but you've cured me of that, I think."

Aunt Rebecca's spectacles were moist and she looked on with delighted eyes while Grace and Gertie, at the first glimpse of Mamie, rushed to her and hugged her with joy.

"By the way," asked a lady of Mrs Stevens a few weeks later, "who is the lovely girl I have met several times with Grace and Gertrude? She is so sweet and modest looking. I have been anxious to meet her."

And Mamie overheard the comment and went to lay her head in aunt Rebecca's lap.

"I wonder what becomes of girls," she said softly, "when they are left to go their own way, or when they won't listen to older people, and go their own way, anyhow?"

And aunt Rebecca smoothed the brown hair lovingly.

"I am glad you listened."

Lord Kelvin.

James Thomson, the father of the eminent Lord Kelvin, was the son of a farmer in the north of Ireland. He had few outward advantages, but his inborn thirst for knowledge conquered all the difficulties, and he became a thorough mathematician and professor of mathematics in the University of Glasgow. Lord Kelvin, though not childish, is of that childlikeness of character regarding which it was said, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." A writer in Good Words sketches the distinguished professor as follows:

He has one strange peculiarity. While the higher mathematics are as easy to him as the alphabet, he often appears puzzled when a sum is presented to him in ordinary numerals. A question of simple addition placed in this way on the board will sometimes lead to the query being put to the class or to an assistant, with a certain funny look of helplessness, "How much is that?"

His power of abstraction is extraordinary. He is never without his note book, which he carries in his pocket and produces at the most unexpected times.

I have seen him when on a visit to a country house, in a crowded drawing room, with all the jabber of conversation going on in full flood, sitting with his note book, and filling page after page with intricate calculations, seeking the solution of some problem which awaited investigation.

He can do this in railway carriages, and in a storm at sea, as calmly as in his library. He will get himself propped up in the corner of his cabin and set to work, and become so absorbed as to be unconscious that there has been a gale blowing while he was at work.

And yet, if recalled to ordinary life by some passing questioner, his gentle face lights up with interest, when others, more self-conscious than he, would display irritation. Indeed, I never knew a man less self-conscious.

He is absolutely without affectation or any thought of self-importance. He will converse with a nobody in a manner so respectful and attentive as to make that nobody imagine that he himself has been delightfully interesting and even informing to Lord Kelvin. This arises from the simplicity and sweetness of a great nature.

Any Old Place Would Do.

A short man with red whiskers, shambling gait, and the remains of a jag, wandered into the Midland last evening and asked for a typewriter's studio. He lives in Kansas, not far from Topeka, and had been here attending the football games. Luck had walked on the same side of the street with him in the matter of bets, and he wanted to stay another week. But his wife expected him home, so he was in search of a typewriter to send home a letter to serve as an apology for his non-appearance.

"Kansas City, this date, ninety-six," he muttered to the typewriter.

"I have that."

"My dear wife."

"Yes."

"Very important business will require my presence in Osawatomie for a few days——"

"Let's see," interrupted the artist. "How do you spell that Osawatomie?"

"Spell it yourself. It's your typewriter."

"I can't."

"Can't spell Osawatomie?" he asked in disgust.

"No."

"Then I'll go to Fort Scott."—Kansas City Journal.

Would Talk in French.

Fred Horner, a successful English adapter of French plays, while dining in a hotel somewhere in the "provinces," asked in most impressive fashion: "Peut-on fumer ici?" To which the waiter replied, wearily: "I don't understand a word of French, sir." "Then, for God's sake, send me somebody who does!" shouted the irate adapter.

A Bee's Weight.

Careful weighing shows that an ordinary bee, not loaded, weighs the five-thousandth part of a pound, so that it takes 5,000 bees to make a pound. But the loaded bee, when he comes in fresh from the fields and flowers, loaded with honey or bee-bread, weighs nearly three times more.

Speed of the Hurricane.

It is said that a hurricane holds the best time on record for one mile, covering the distance in half a minute. Then a balloon has done the mile in forty seconds. The third place is held by a railway engine, in 53.77 seconds.

The State of Illinois has used this year more than 4,000,000 barrels of beer.

Utilizing Barn Room.

Barns are expensive. It therefore behooves farmers to make the best use of all the room that they afford. If the barn has a basement, that will naturally be used as stable room for farm stock in winter. But if the stock be confined in stalls, as it always should be, it will not prevent separate compartments for storing vegetables and roots, and still others for storing farm implements, which may with care be made to occupy a very small surface space by hanging up the lighter ones and laying still others over those that are too heavy to rest on anything except the floor of concrete or soil. This room should be closely secured to prevent fowls from getting in and soiling the machinery, besides seriously damaging it with their excrement. Many a farmer who leaves half his farm implements exposed to rains and snows can find a place in the barn basement for them if he will give some thought to making the most of the room that the barn basement affords.—American Cultivator.

Bee Cultivation.

Bees won't touch alfalfa till sweet clover has done blossoming. I find quite a change in the minds of some of my neighbors. They are beginning to think that sweet clover is a pretty good thing, after all. I have sold some seed to one, and two others are talking of sowing some. It will grow on our poorest land, and make a good crop, and choke out all the weeds we have in this country, including sand burrs and cockle burrs. If it were of no other use, it would pay well as a fertilizer. But it is a splendid hay crop, and, in my opinion, there is nothing better for honey. I have about ten acres seeded down for next year. I put several acres in the corn at the last cultivating, and have a nice stand. You see, by putting it in the corn, we have the crop the next season. If sown in the fall, it will come up early the next spring, and make a good growth that season, but not seed. I always sow the seed with the hull on.—Bee Gleanings.

Device for a Two-Man Saw.

A cross-cut saw or two-man saw can be adjusted so that one man can saw as much wood as two and as easily as with a man at each end. The arrangement is a piece of board, b, 1x3 inches, with a hole in each end to fit tightly over the handles, and a slot, a, in one end to straddle the blade. When logs are not too thick this can be readily manipulated.—Farm and Home.

The Value of Bran.

It is not alone for its nutrition that wheat bran is valuable, though it contains considerable of the nitrogenous element of the wheat. This, however, is not so large a proportion as it used to be under the old system of bolting the wheat, reserving only the starch for flour. The best flour is now much darker than formerly. It contains the germ and considerable of the gluten, though some of this still goes with the bran. But wheat bran is an excellent alternative for all stock fed largely on meadow hay. For milch cows it should be made into a mash with warm water. It will increase the milk secretion and will make the cow poor if she does not have grain with it to supply the butter fats in which bran is deficient.—Ex.

One Year's Poultry Returns.

These fowls are kept solely for my own pleasure at my country home in Tarrytown, but I think my statement is a good showing for an amateur, and may interest your "Farmer's Daughter" and others who read your valuable paper The fowls number 123, including cocks, cockerels, hens and pullets. The daily egg product varied from 26 to 58, and reached, in the twenty-nine days, a total of 1,169. During this time two hens hatched 19 chicks, and six hens were sitting. Therefore, leaving out the sitting hens, cocks and cockerels, I had from 106 laying hens 1,169 eggs in twenty-nine days.—Country Gentleman.

Desirable Horses.

There will ever be a demand for the ten-hundred-pound family horse, electric roads and bicycles notwithstanding. This is the only all-round horse equally good in the carriage and on the farm, and the cost of such in the matter of keeping till three years old is but little, if any more than the cost of one steer, and will bring in the market three or four times as much.—New England Farmer.

Milking Machines.

In the New York Tribune "Practical Farmer" says that the tubes of milking machines cannot be kept clean. The machine I was familiar with could be fitted up to milk the 200-cow dairy in five minutes, instead of over six hours, and there is no difficulty in keeping everything about it sweet. It is also a complete manipulator. The calf's bunting is thoroughly imitated. It is so simple that a boy or girl of 15 could work it. It is manufactured in Scotland, and is a decided success. Every large dairy should have one, as it saves the cost of itself in a short time. The milk keeps longer, as it does not get contaminated with bacteria, being in an air-tight bucket. It can be carried and cooled over the refrigerator ready for shipment inside of an hour for the whole performance.

A Safety Ladder.

Ladders in use about the farm year after year are likely to become worn and loosened from wear, and to make this fact known inconveniently when some one is ascending or descending them. A "round" breaks, or slips out of its socket, or the whole ladder "spreads." Moreover, farm ladders are usually so heavy as to be very inconvenient to use. An improved ladder is shown in the sketch. It has three uprights, each small in width and thickness, because the three pieces give great strength and stiffness. The "rounds," being supported in the middle, can be made somewhat lighter than is usually done. To keep the ladder from spreading at the ends and in the middle, a light iron rod is put through the ladder and fastened with a nut, as shown in the diagram. A ladder should have an iron brad fastened to each upright, at the base, to keep it from slipping, as this is one of the most common dangers to be feared in the use of ladders.—American Agriculturist.

SAFETY LADDER.

Feeding Grain to Hens.

Some hens are greedy, and seize the food to prevent other hens from securing their share. It is such hens that become overfat and finally cease to lay. When feed is given in a way to allow the hens to eat it without being compelled to scratch or work for it, the result will always be an unequal distribution of the food among the members of the flock. The proper mode is to scatter the grain over a large surface, as then each hen will be compelled to work, and all will fare alike.—Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph.

Shade for the Dwelling.

Shade trees are essential, only don't let them shade the house. Farmers to enjoy life must have their surroundings pleasant, commodious, convenient and healthy. These conditions can only be obtained by attention to details, by having a place for everything and everything in its place. Once get started along these lines and improved methods follow, and if we persevere we shall have our reward.—New York Farmer.

Odds and Ends.

A tablespoonful of turpentine boiled with your white clothes will greatly aid the whitening process.

To prevent hair falling out, wet it thoroughly once or twice a week with a weak solution of salt water.

Polished oak furniture may be beautifully cleaned with a soft woolen rag dipped in turpentine. It must then be rubbed off with a dry cloth.

A good broom holder may be made by putting two large screws—nails will answer—into the wall about two inches apart. Drop the broom between them, handle downward.

Any woman doing her own work may so systematize it that it will be the easiest possible for her. She need not follow any other person's methods, unless they are the very best for her own conditions.

Always make coffee out of fresh water, and use it as soon as it is made. The coffee pot should be kept scrupulously clean. If you use the French pot every part of it should be thoroughly washed and dried after using.

The sticky fly paper which is commonly sold during the summer season makes an excellent mouse trap. A sheet of it laid in front of a hole from which mice emerge is sufficient to hold them fast until they are captured and destroyed. The same paper may be used over and over again.

It is said that when ink is spilled upon a carpet or anything made of wool the spot should immediately be covered with common salt. When this has absorbed all the ink it will carefully take it off with an old knife or spoon and apply more salt. Keep doing this until the ink is all taken up.

The war between Greece and Turkey means an immediate rise in the value of cereals and America is in a position to reap the greatest advantage from this upward movement. All western Europe is at present being supplied with cereals by Russia and America. The hostilities along the Mediterranean will naturally cause a diminution of the Russian trade, and increased shipments from America will follow.

Little Greece does not seem to be at all alarmed regarding the attitude of the powers on the Cretan question, and King George's troops continue their work of giving relief to their offended brethern from the persecutions of Turkish rule. Though vastly inferior in numbers to their adversaries, the Greeks are nevertheless formidable because of their being supported by the moral sentiment of the civilized world. "Thrice armed is he who hath his quarrel just."

The measure to provide free text books for pupils in the public schools will be no doubt assailed in many quarters, and unquestionably there are reasons for opposition to the State's pursuing such a course yet the arguments in favor of this policy are stronger still and it is be hoped the bill will carry. There is no good reason why the State should not provide text books to pupils the same as other supplies are furnished. To a large percentage of parents the annual purchase of school books in a family of several children is a heavy expense and a burden hard to bear and works a real hardship on many a family man of small means.

In affirming the judgment of the United States Court of this district in the case of Warren E. Price, the disseminator of indecent books, the Supreme Court of the United States brushed aside technicalities that in this State would have had great, not to say predominant, weight. Price is a Market street book seller and has been of the most dangerous and unscrupulous as well as the largest dealer in obscene books and pictures in this city. For years he carried on his business in defiance of the law and openly boasted that he was too shrewd to be caught. A little over a year ago evidence against Price was procured by Postoffice Inspector Erwin. The arrest and indictment of Price followed, and so did his conviction and a sentence to serve eighteen months in the penitentiary. Price appealed to the Supreme Court and was admitted to bail. The appeal was based upon the ommission of the word "obscene" from one place in the indictment. There was no pretense that Price was not guilty, but a mere reliance upon a clerical error in the wording of the indictment to defeat justice. The Supreme Court considered this point a mere subterfuge and found that nothing in the case had prejudiced the rights of the defendant. The decision in the Price appeal is also valuable as affirming the former ruling of the Court on the subject of "decoy" or "test" letters. It was urged that Price ought not to have been convicted because the evidence of his guilt was elicited by a series of test letters, and that the inspector had procured the commission of the crime. Upon a former occasion the Supreme Court held the test letter to be perfectly legitimate, and in fact to be the only method of preserving the purity of the mails.—S. F. Report.

It is a severe commentary on the state of the Christian religion in Europe that the little kingdom of Greece should be appointed by Providence to perform work which properly belongs to the so called Christian powers. The spectacle is one which cannot fail to make an impression upon history. The Great Assassin has for years waded at will in Christian blood. The powers have looked on with horror, yet not one of them has presented a forcible protest. According to Mr. Gladstone the Sultan has long been an outlaw, entitled to no consideration at the hands of any Christian nation, but notwithstanding he has been permitted whenever he pleased to put people to death for professing the religion of Europe. Of course history will not fail to detect and elaborate upon the cause of this indifference. It is an everlasting tribute to the power of commerce that it should prefer the death of a few thousand Christians every year to a disturbance of its trade relations with Turkey and the countries which would be embroiled in the event an effort was made to put a stop to the bloodshed. But the end of all this approaching. Trade is putting in its final protest by directing its Christian kings throughout Europe to prevent King George from marching against the Sultan's armies. But the protests are vain. The storm has broken and nothing can now prevent a temporary disturbance of "trade." In other words King George has at last aroused the moral sentiments of Europe. He has said practically that the Sultan may murder Christians as much as he likes, but when it comes to murdering Greek Christians the practice must be discouraged, even if a war is necessary to effect the discouragement. What a situation for civilized and Christian Europe! To be taught humanity by a Mediterranean monarchy which it does not consider of sufficient importance to be admitted to its diplomatic councils must be humiliating to the kings and statesmen who run the world. But the people everywhere are with Greece and the kings and statesmen will have to toe the mark. The days of the Sultan come pretty near being numbered.

CLARK—At Francis, February 22, 1897, Joseph Clark, a native of Pennsylvania, aged 77 years

On Sunday, February 28th, preaching services will be held as follows: Independence, 11 o'clock a. m.; subject, "Active religious principles." Lone Pine, 7 o'clock p. m. All are codially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

Ben. Lasky of Lone Pine was a visitor in town on Tuesday.

George Gilliam came down from Fish Springs yesterday, returning to-day.

It is reported that John Kelly has quit work on the Sanger copper mine and come in to Big Pine Assessor Chalfant spent several days in town this week preparing for levying the assessment of 1897.

Ed. M. Clarke and John Collins came down from Bishop last Monday and spent a couple of days in town.

Miss Mary Mulholland returned from Bishop on Wednesday, where she has been visiting with friends.

The Showalter brothers came down from Big Pine yesterday to do some carpenter work for J. R. Moffatt.

Dr. Woodin and J. W. Murphy got back last night from a trip to Salt Wells Valley and Garlock. They were gone about ten days.

Cannon and Longford, two prominent mining men of Salt Lake, Utah, have purchased a group of mines at Panamint paying upwards of one hundred thousand dollars for them.

Mrs. Fred Samuels of San Francisco, accompanied by her little son Harold, arrived at Independence last Friday evening and will spend about ten days visiting with her mother, Mrs. M. Lewis.

Jack Welch has gone to Ubaheba with a lot of supplies and will put the road leading to the copper mines recently bonded by Mr. Ryan in good condition. Active work in developing the property will be commenced as soon as this is completed.

Dave Holland spent several days in town this week. He came up from Randsburg on Monday's stage, having stopped at the mine recently purchased by Fred Samuels and others at Mountain Springs for a couple of days. He says this will undoubtedly prove a valuable property.

Joseph Clark died at the home of J. V. Skinner at Francis last Monday morning, his death being caused by hemorrhage of the stomach. The deceased was father of Mrs. J. V. Skinner; he came from the East about a month ago to make his home with his daughter. He was a Mason and the funeral took place last Tuesday under the auspices of Inyo Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M.

The Kern County Californian of the 20th contains the following: "At 2 o'clock this afternoon the case of E. L. Willow who was examined on a charge of killing Percy Douglass was called by Judge Fox in the Superior Court room. No argument was made by the attorneys on either side and the Court directed an order to be made discharging the defendthere not being sufficient evidence to hold him over for trial."

Mr. Ward L. Smith, of Frederickstown Mo., was troubled with chronic diarrhœa for over thirty years. He had become fully satisfied that it was only a question of a short time when he would have to give up. He had been treated by some of the best physicians in Europe and America but got no permanent relief. One day he picked up a newspaper and chanced to read an advertisement of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy. He got a bottle of it, the first dose helped him and its continued use cured him. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited,

C. A. WALTER,
Independence, Cal.

The Kearsarge Trail.

T. P. Lukien, president of the Pasadena bank, was at Independence last August having come through the mountains by way of the Kearsarge trail. Mr. Lukien is an enthusiastic mountaineer and spends several months each year in the high Sierras. While here, he stated that the grandest mountain scenery he ever beheld was in crossing the Sierras through the Kings river canyon and Kearsarge trail. He also said that many tourists are deterred from making this trip by the fact that the Sierra Club in their pamphlet describing the various trails through the Sierras designate the Kearsarge trail as "dangerous". At least one hundred people with pack outfits cross this trail every summer, and a serious accident has never yet occurred. However, there are two bad places on the trail, the remainder of the way being as safe as a highway. One of these places is known as "Kings river hill," and is a steep ascent up the mountain side from Kings river; the other is known as the "steps" and is about half a mile east from the summit, where the trail leads up a steep bluff about five hundred feet high, and the ascent is made by jumping from ledge to ledge of rock which forms a natural stairway. Both these places can be avoided and a new trail built at a trifling cost, and it is to the interest of both Visalia and Independence that it should be done, as tourists nearly always start from these points. Many Visalia people have crossed the trail, among the number being J. Sub. Johnson, A. M. Squires and J. T. Stewart, who came over last year. These gentlemen are familiar with the situation and can explain to their Visalia friends the necessity of the work, and no doubt the "Kings river hill" trail will be repaired from that end of the line. We have canvassed the matter here, and the people of Independence will build a new trail around the "steps". Two men can easily accomplish the work in two weeks. Work can be commenced at a point on the trail at the foot of the bluff and continue around the mountain side on the north, coming into the old trail on top of the plateau. Upon the proper assurance that the work will be done the Sierra Club will no doubt remove its ban of "dangerous," and during the Summer a large number of people will cross the summit at this point. The Kings river canyon is said to surpass the Yosemite in the wild grandeur of its scenery. The altitude of the range where the trail crosses the summit is 13,000 feet, and on all sides the towering peaks rise in inaccessible pinnacles, culminating in Mt. Whitney over 15,000 feet above the level of the sea. There are a score of peaks in sight from the trail that exceed 14,000 feet in height. Beautiful meadows abound along the line, where pasturage is free to all. All the mountain streams and lakes are filled with trout, and the fishing is unsurpassed. A most delightful summer outing can be spent in crossing the mountains by way of the Kearsarge trail, returning by way of the Hockett trail, Whitney Creek, Kern River and Mineral King. A trifling sum expended in repairing the trail as above indicated will make it absolutely safe, and as the unrivalled attractions of the country become better known to the outside world, the number of tourists will be largely increased.

Big Mining Suit.

What promises to be a hard-fought mining suit was filed in the Superior Court last Tuesday, the title of the case being L. Lasky vs. Ruperto Carrasco et als. Some time ago D. Holland and others located an extension of the noted Keynot mine at Beveridge which has yielded upwards of a million dollars in gold. They began work on their claim and have opened up an ore body which promises to equal in value the product taken from for at the regular meetings of the Board, on bills duly verified, by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price for the faithful performance of said contracts.

The maintenance care and management of such indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Bids must be indorsed "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. on said Eighth day of April, 1897, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

I have given Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a fair test and consider it one of the very best remedies for croup that I have ever found. One dose has always been sufficient, although I use it freely. Any cold my children contract yields very readily to this medicine. I can conscientiously recommend it for croup and colds in children.—Geo. E. Wolff, Clerk of the Circuit Court, Fernandina, Fla. THE SLAPPING SAL

By CONAN DOYLE.

"Call back the boats," he cried in his thin, creaking voice. "Clear away for action there. Cast loose those main deck guns. Brace back the yards, Mr. Smeaton, and stand by to go about when she has way enough."

Round the curve of the estuary was coming a huge vessel. Her great yellow bowsprit and white winged figurehead were jutting out from the cluster of palm trees, while high above them towered three immense masts, with the tricolor flag floating superbly from the mizzen. Round she came, the deep blue water creaming under her forefoot, until her long, curving, black side, her line of shining copper beneath and of snow white hammocks above and the thick clusters of men who peered over her bulwarks were all in full view.

Her lower yards were slung, her ports triced up and her long guns run out all ready for action. Lying behind one of the promontories of the island the lookout men of the Gloire upon the shore had seen the cul de sac into which the British frigate had headed, so that Captain de Milon had observed the Leda as Captain Johnson had the Slapping Sal.

But the splendid discipline of the British service was at its best in such a crisis. The boats flew back, their crews clustered aboard, they were swung up at the davits and the fall ropes made fast. Hammocks were brought up and stowed, bulkheads sent down, ports and magazines opened, the fires put out in the galley, and the drums beat to quarters. Swarms of men set the headsails and brought the frigate round, while the gun crews threw off their jackets and shirts, tightened their belts and ran out their 18 pounders, peering through the open portholes at the stately Frenchman. The wind was very light. Hardly a ripple showed itself upon the clear blue water, but the sails blew gently out as the breeze came over the wooded banks. The Frenchman had gone about also, and both ships were now heading slowly for the sea under fore and aft canvas, the Gloire 1,000 yards in advance. She luffed up to cross the Leda's bows, but the British ship came round also, and the two rippled slowly on in such a silence that the ringing of the ramrods as the French marines drove home their charges clanged quite loudly upon the ear.

"Not much sea room, Mr. Wharton," remarked the captain.

"I have fought actions in less, sir."

"We must keep our distance and trust to our gunnery. She is very heavily manned, and if she got alongside we might find ourselves in trouble."

"I see the shakos of soldiers aboard of her, two companies of light infantry from Martinique. Now we have her! Hard a-port and let her have it as we cross her stern!"

The keen eye of the little commander had seen the surface ripple which told of a passing breeze. He had used it to dart across behind the big Frenchman and to rake her with every gun as he passed. But once past her the Leda had to come back into the wind to keep out of shoal water. The maneuver brought her on the starboard side of the Frenchman, and the trim little frigate seemed to heel right over under the crashing broadside which burst from the gaping ports. A moment later her topmen were swarming aloft to set her topsails and royals, and she strove to cross the Gloire's bows and rake her again. The French captain, however, brought his frigate's head round, and the two rode side by side within easy pistol shot, pouring broadsides into each other in one of those murderous duels which, could they all be recorded, would mottle our charts with blood.

In that heavy tropical air, with so faint a breeze, the smoke formed a thick bank round the two vessels from which the topmasts only protruded. Neither could see anything of its enemy save the throbs of fire in the darkness, and the guns were sponged and trained and fired into a dense wall of vapor. On the poop and the forecastle the marines, in two little red lines, were pouring in their volleys, but neither they nor the seamen gunners could see what effect their fire was having. Nor indeed could they tell how far they were suffering themselves, for standing at a gun one could but hazily see that upon the right and left. But above the roar of the cannon came the sharper sound of the piping shot, the crashing of riven planks and the occasional heavy thud as spar or block came hurtling onto the deck. The lieutenant paced up and down behind the line of guns, while Captain Johnson fanned the smoke away with his cocked hat and peered eagerly out.

"This is rare, Bobby," said he as the lieutenant joined him, then suddenly restraining himself, "What have we lost, Mr. Wharton?"

"Our main topsail yard and our gaff, sir."

"Where's the flag?"

"Gone overboard, sir."

"They'll think we've struck. Lash a boat's ensign on the starboard arm of the mizzen cross jackyard."

"Yes, sir."

A round shot dashed the binnacle to pieces between them. A second knocked two marines into a bloody, palpitating mass. For a moment the smoke rose, and the English captain saw that his adversary's heavier metal was producing a horrible effect. The Leda was a shattered wreck. Her deck was strewn with corpses. Several of her portholes were knocked into one, and one of her 18 pounder guns had been thrown right back onto her breech and pointed straight up to the sky. The thin line of marines still loaded and fired, but half the guns were silent, and their crews were piled thickly around them.

"Stand by to repel boarders!" yelled the captain.

"Cutlasses, lads, cutlasses!" roared Wharton.

"Hold your volley till they touch," cried the captain of marines.

The huge loom of the Frenchman was seen bursting through the smoke. Thick clusters of boarders hung upon her sides and shrouds. A final broadside leapt from her ports, and the mainmast of the Leda, snapping short off a few feet above the deck, spun into the air and crashed down upon the port guns, killing ten men and putting the whole battery out of action. An instant later the two ships scraped together, and the starboard bower anchor of the Gloire caught the mizzen chains of the Leda upon the port side. With a yell the black swarm of boarders steadied themselves for a spring.

But their feet were never to reach that blood stained deck. From somewhere there came a well aimed whiff of grape and another and another. The English marines and seamen, waiting with cutlass and musket behind the silent guns, saw with amazement the dark masses thinning and shedding away. At the same time the port broadside of the Frenchman burst into a roar.

"Clear away the wreck!" roared the captain. "What the devil are they firing at?"

"Get the guns clear," panted the lieutenant. "We'll do them yet, boys!"

The wreckage was torn and hacked and splintered until first one gun and then another roared into action again. The Frenchman's anchor had been cut away, and the Leda had worked herself free from that fatal hug. But now suddenly there was a scurry up the shrouds of the Gloire, and 100 Englishmen were shouting themselves hoarse

"They're running! They're running! They're running!"

And it was true. The Frenchman had ceased to fire and was intent only upon clapping on every rail that she could carry.

But that shouting 100 could not claim it all as their own. As the smoke cleared it was not difficult to see the reason. The ships had gained the mouth of the estuary during the fight, and there, about four miles out to sea, was the Leda's consort bearing down under full sail to the sound of the guns. Captain de Milon had done his part for one day, and presently the Gloire was drawing off swiftly to the north, while the Dido was bowling along at her skirts, rattling away with her bowchasers, until a headland hid them both from view.

But the Leda lay sorely stricken, with her mainmast gone, her bulwarks shattered, her mizzen topmast and gaff shot away, her sails like a beggar's rags and 100 of her crew dead and wounded. Close beside her a mass of wreckage floated upon the waves. It was the stern post of a mangled vessel, and across it in white letters on a black ground was printed "The Slapping Sal."

"By the Lord, it was the brig that saved us!" cried Mr. Wharton. "Hudson brought her into action with the Frenchman and was blown out of the water by a broadside."

"They're running!"

The little captain turned on his heel and paced up and down the deck. Already his crew were plugging the shotholes, knotting and splicing and mending. When he came back, the lieutenant saw a softening of the stern lines about his mouth and eyes.

"Are they all gone?"

"Every man. They must have sunk with the wreck."

The two officers looked down at the sinister name and at the stump of wreckage which floated in the discolored water. Something black washed to and fro beside a splintered gaff and a tangle of halyards. It was the outrageous ensign, and near it a scarlet cap was floating.

"He was a villain, but he was a Briton," said the captain at last. "He lived like a dog; but, by God, he died like a man!"

THE END.

ANIMALS AND MUSIC.

The Familiar Stable Call Brought the Stampeding Horses Back.

The editor of Thierfreu relates the following story of his own personal experience of the sagacity of military horses. In the year 1872, during a skirmish with the Sioux Indians, "the Third cavalry regiment had formed an encampment in a valley on the southern border of Dakota. At nightfall the horses were tethered by a long line to the ground. Toward daybreak a violent storm of rain and hail burst over the valley. The terrified animals broke loose from their fastening, and in their fright tore away up the steep sides of the valley into the territory of the enemy. Without horses, at the mercy of the enemy, we should be lost. Yet it was impossible, in the half darkness, to go after them into an unknown country, probably full of Indians. The captain, as a last resource, ordered the stable call to be sounded. In a few minutes every horse had returned to the encampment, and we were saved."

A gentleman who was a finished musician resided some years ago at Darmstadt and kept a dog, which was the terror of all the singers and instrumentalists in the place, for it had the fatal habit of raising its face to heaven and howling whenever a false note was emitted. It never made a mistake, and well known singers were said to tremble when they saw their unwelcome judge, seated by his master's side, at concerts or at the opera, for Max was a regular first nighter and a great friend of the theater director. He was never known to miss a new opera. Max was no respecter of persons, and when the singing was but a shade out he would attract the attention of the whole audience to it with a terrific howl. One tenor went so far as to refuse to sing unless the dog was removed, but Max was so great a favorite with the Darmstadt public and such a well known frequenter that the singer might as well have requested to have the director himself removed from the stalls, and he was obliged to give in with as good a grace as possible. The dog's master stated that he had trained him when he was quite a puppy, and by the time he was 3 years old the dog was as good a judge as his master of a false note.—Boston Transcript.

JACKETS OR NO JACKETS.

This Is Not a Fashion Article, but Is Interesting to Womankind.

It is rarely in this country that potatoes are boiled before they are peeled, or, in the old-fashioned way of expressing it, in their "jackets," and yet in Ireland the very headquarters of this vegetable, such a thing is scarcely known as pre-peeling them. Those who have never tried them in this way are advised to do so some day, when they can make sure they are brought to the table the moment they are done, and not allowed to stand any length of time before they are eaten. Select those of equal size, allow them, after washing and scrubbing thoroughly, to stand covered with cold water for half an hour, then throw into plenty of boiling water, and after boiling twenty minutes prick to the heart with a two-pronged fork; if not soft, cook a little longer, drain, sprinkle with salt, return to the range, and when the saucepan is hot, toss them, to allow the salt to shake evenly through and to dry well, place in a warm napkin on a red-hot plate and serve with good, sweet butter. The flavor of the snowy, fleecy morsels, taken from the jackets and buttered as they are eaten, will be found to be much better than if peeled before boiling; indeed, epicures declare they can detect the difference at once, and as the most nutritious part of a potato is next to the skin none of this is lost.

Potatoes in their jackets make a suitable adjunct to oysters baked and served in the shell. Wash and scrub the oysters, put them in a large baking pan in a hot oven, and in five minutes or less they will begin to open and must be sent to the table at once, six apiece on hot plates. It is well to have a small red dolley at each plate with which to grasp the oyster while opening. Grilled sardines are also particularly good with these same potatoes; they are very savory, yet easily prepared. Grilling is merely another name for brolling, and unless one possesses a perforated broiler, not expensive, however, shaped like a waffle iron, which comes on purpose to cook articles that would slip through the ordinary gridiron or broiler, they may be cooked easily, quickly and satisfactorily by proceeding as follows: Make the frying pan or chafing dish sizzling hot, drop in a teaspoonful of sweet butter, or use the oil in which the sardines are packed as preferred. The pan must be kept very hot, when the fish will brown almost instantly on one side, then turned, browned on the other, and they are ready to be served on toasted crackers or squares of toast softened with bouillon.

The butcher will supply marrow bones on purpose for grilling, and they, too, fit in excellently with potatoes in their jackets, as would scallops, done to a golden brown in boiling olive oil, fried shrimps, roasted crabs and the like.

People who have an open grate with a glowing fire of hard coal, possess the means, with the addition of a chafing dish, that make possible the most savory suppers imaginable, and may delight their friends by novel invitations to sup, with the words "potatoes in their jackets" added, instead of "dancing," "cards," or what not.

No Idea of Music.

Colonel Burr, of Virginia, was a mighty fox-hunter, and loved the sport beyond words. He owned a fine pack of hounds, and, during the season, thought of nothing but his hunters, his dogs, and the weather. He was once entertaining an army friend from Texas, whose ideas of hunting any animal involved the use of fire-arms, and who had never seen a fox-hound. He had been with difficulty persuaded to go forth one morning with the colonel and some friends to a meet, and they were waiting impatiently for the hounds to take the scent. Presently there burst upon their listening ears the din of thirty canine voices in full cry. The colonel's eyes gleamed, and, as he settled his feet in the stirrups and stretched his arm toward the yelping pack, he cried: "Major, listen to that heavenly music!" The major pricked up his ears for a second or two, and then replied: "I can't hear a thing. Those dogs are making such a noise." The colonel put his spur savagely into his horse's side and dashed away, leaving his guest to his own devices.

For Advertising Purposes.

Experiments have lately been made in Switzerland with a view to putting the beautiful lakes of that country to some practical account.

Hitherto these waters have been admired merely because of their natural beauty, but now some enterprising business men have devised a scheme by which they may be made useful for advertising purposes.

The plan is to paint the words of the advertisement in big white letters on a black background.

When sunk and securely held at the bottom of the lake, the advertisement is perfectly legible, the reflection of the light on passing through the water bringing the words near the surface.

It is announced that hitherto the experiments that have been made have been very successful.

One Way to Break Glass.

It is scarcely credible, but it is a fact, that a glass can be broken by the voice. If you strike a thin wine glass while you hold it by the stem it will emit a certain note—in most cases a pretty deep one. On approaching the glass rapidly to your mouth, and shouting into it the same note as loudly as possible, the vibrations of the glass being thereby extended, it will be shivered into fragments. This used to be a favorite experiment of Lablache, the renowned singer, who would thus break, one after the other, as many glasses as were handed to him.

Slept a Year.

In Blanchet's curious book, "Comptes Rendus," mention is made of a girl who at the age of 18 had a peculiar "spell," which the physicians pronounced "constitutional lethargic slumber," which lasted for forty days. Again at the age of 20 she slept for fifty days. Her last recorded "long sleep" lasted almost a year—from April 20, 1862, until March, 1863.

A lobster's skin when shedding splits down the back and comes off in two equal parts. The tail slips out of the shell like a finger out of a glove.

TARIFF AND TAXES.

Whatever the new order of things may be in tariff and taxes, business is already better, and there are sure signs of its being rapidly improved. Infirmities and ailments are the tariff and taxes on physical strength. Lumbago is a complaint that taxes our best endurance. It cripples and unfits one for anything like active exertion. It is a sudden backache, but no matter how sudden, St. Jacobs Oil is quick and sure enough in its prompt cure to break it up and restore strength. In paying the taxes on our health the best currency is the best remedy for pain, and its prompt use the surest way of getting back to business.

CALENDARS AND COUPONS.

So many beautiful calendars and entertaining novelties have been issued by the proprietors of Hood's Sarsaparilla, that we are hardly surprised to receive this season not only one of the very prettiest designs in calendars, but with it coupons which entitle the recipient to attractive novelties. Every one who gets a Hood's Sarsaparilla calendar for 1897 secures something that will prove interesting and valuable as well as a beautiful specimen of the lithographer's art. The calendar is accompanied this season by an amusing little book on "The Weather." Ask your druggist for Hood's Coupon Calendar, or send 6 cents in stamps for one to C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

ELEPHANTS IN INDIA.

No One Allowed to Shoot Them Without Special Permission.

Nobody may shoot an elephant, says the London Telegraph, on the Annamulle or Tipperah hills or anywhere else throughout India and Ceylon without permission unless it be a "rogue," or plainly dangerous and destructive. The capture of the wild elephant and his careful training are things carried out under an admirable and scientific system, which gives to the administration in all its branches and to the native courts a superb staff of massive and faithful servants, the commissariat and artillery elephants.

Although they will seldom or never breed in captivity, the grand creatures are easy to keep and manage, invaluable for many special purposes, and at their demise whatever tusks they may carry go to the world's stock of ivory. The older it is the better generally its quality. But, in any case, how senseless it seems to extirpate the living source of this beautiful commodity, as the reckless hunters and ignorant native chiefs and merchants are still allowed to do in central Africa! When shall we see the governments of these various regions sensible enough to perceive and proclaim that live elephants are very much more valuable even commercially than dead ones, and that the preservation of these stately and serviceable animals shall be henceforward a fixed policy for African benefit?

It has been truly remarked that directly the native and foreign hunters are convinced that one live elephant is worth dozens of tusks they will be as keen to preserve the animal as they now are to exterminate him. We might plead earnestly, even upon the ground of aestheticism and natural science, for the protection in future of the noble beast, whose majesty and tranquillity of mien so well become his silent haunts and philosophic, harmless existence. The ears of those, however, who massacre the innocent giant to cut from him 20 or 30 pounds of material for paper knives and shoe horns would be closed to such remonstrances. The best hope of all who understand the value of the elephant for Africa is that even the most ruthless of his assassins may come to learn that they are destroying their own markets. The rest is for official authorities to do. But certain it is that if decided measures be not promptly taken there will be no elephants to save and, we shall see in another continent the shameful human sin and folly perpetrated which has stripped America of every free living vestige of her noble droves of bison.

The Irish Potato Not Irish.

"The peculiarity of the Irish potato, so called, is in the fact that it is not Irish," observed one of the potato experts of the agricultural department. "The potato originally grew wild in the fields of Chile, Peru and Mexico. Sir John Hawkins did not take it to Ireland until 1565. Sir Francis Drake took it to England 20 years afterward. It did better, however, in Ireland than anywhere else and got its name, no doubt, because of its early and extensive cultivation in Ireland. Botanically it was originally known as the Batata virginiana, but in after years it was properly identified and classified as the Solanum tuberorum. As the winter stock is now being laid in, it may be well for the inexperienced to be able to select good potatoes.

"Cut the raw potato in two and rub the halves together. If the moisture on rubbing is soft and liquid enough to drop, the potato will be soggy and set when cooked. Rub the halves briskly around on each other. A potato that will be dry and mealy when cooked will give out a good, rich froth, while a poor one will show only a watery froth by the same action. The pieces will stick together if the potato is a good one. Of course the whole thing is to test the amount of starch in the potato, for the more starch the better the potato. If, however, a person intends to lay in a very large supply, the best plan, of course, is to cook them, and there will be no chance of a mistake."—Washington Star.

THE TIPPING QUESTION.

How It Is Practiced at Home and Abroad and the Need For a Reform.

The question of "tipping" seems small enough in detail, but rather important when exaggerated.

A woman who spent last winter in one of the most sumptuous of New York hotels says she invariably gave a quarter to her waiter at breakfast and luncheon, those being meals taken alone. At dinner time she was joined by her husband, who always handed the servitor 50 cents.

The latter sum seemed to evenly fill the man's idea of what was due him, and his "Thank you, sir!" was bland and gracious, but the lady's modest quarters always found their grave in the black waistcoat pocket, with no expression of gratitude from the recipient's face, which wore a meaning look, as of one who says, "Women are mean, an never knows 'ow to do the right thing by a man, but one 'as to put up with 'em."

It is only in reckless, good natured America that optional fees are so much larger than they ought to be. A dollar, which is a common enough sum for a man to give at dinner in a fashionable restaurant, would make a French waiter stare, although he would have the presence of mind to pocket it quickly.

In Paris there is an unwritten scale which apportions 5 per cent on the amount of a customer's bill as a tip. Thus a person ordering a dinner that costs $2 would, on settling his bill, add 10 cents for the attendant.

It is time we had either a legal or informal rule governing tips in this country, and it is to be hoped that some rich persons will help on the reform.

It will never be done by those whose means are really small enough to feel the tax, for it is one of the errors of the impecunious to feel obliged to show as much liberality as a millionaire, even if, like the guest in "Charley's Aunt," he has to borrow half a dollar from the butler with which to tip him.—Illustrated American.

A fly is almost invincible. It will survive long immersion in water and will sustain the odors of sulphur and other disinfectants without apparent injury. Only turpentine, chloroform and ammonia can get the better of a fly.

DANGER ENVIRONS US

If we live in a region where malaria is prevalent, it is useless to hope to escape it if unprovided with a medicinal safeguard. Wherever the endemic is most prevalent and malignant—in South and Central America, the West Indies and certain portions of Mexico and the Isthmus of Panama Hostetter's Stomach Bitters has proved a remedy for and preventive of the disease in every form. Not less effective is it in curing rheumatism, liver and kidney complaints, dyspepsia, biliousness and nervousness.

MIRACLES IN MEDICINE.

The Wonderful Progress Made within the Past Few Years.

Diseases That Our Mothers Thought Incurable Now Cured by Paine's Celery Compound.

It is difficult, almost impossible, to overestimate the importance of recent advances in medicine and surgery.

In surgery there is the application of the X-ray in determining complicated fractures.

In medicine there is the serum-treatment for germ diseases, and more important still, the extended use of Paine's celery compound in the treatment of the many diseases that arise from a faulty or impaired nervous system.

This class of ailments causes more suffering and earlier deaths than all others, and that is why so much public prominence was at once given to Paine's celery compound when its discovery was first announced by Prof. Phelps of Dartmouth college.

The rapid and sure way that Paine's celery compound cures neuralgia, rheumatism and nervous debility is marvelous even in the eyes of this wonder-working quarter of the century.

Ancient miracles were contrary to natural laws, whereas the remarkable power of Paine's celery compound to make people well, comes from a better understanding of the natural causes of disease.

That wonderful set of nerves known as the "sympathetic nervous system," that knits every part of the body together and harmonizes all, is understood today as never before. Many persons are not aware that any such nerves exist. They do not know that nothing goes on in any part of the body that every other part does not instantly "know of." The closeness of this sympathy is familiarly illustrated by headaches, indigestion, rheumatism, neuralgia, etc. About every case of sleeplessness, nervousness and dyspepsia is a "sympathetic strike" by brain, nerves or stomach, induced by the lowering of the general health.

People who think to get rid of these troubles by some medicine that disregards the general health of the body are on the wrong track. In getting such diseases as neuralgia and rheumatism out of the system Paine's celery compound proceeds at once to restore a normal appetite and regulate the nerves, as the foundation for building up the health and vigor.

It regulates the bowels without delay, and sees to it that the poisonous humors that are bursting through the skin, in what are, for purposes of classifying, called skin diseases, are given a ready outlet. On this basis of purified blood and regulated nerves the permanent cure of every form of blood diseases, such as eczema, salt rheum, bad complexion, is now assured by this really wonderful remedy.

If the reader of this is not in perfect health let him simply try a first bottle of Paine's celery compound and carefully note the results.

WINTER JOYS.

When the window pane is crusted
With a fairyland of snow,
And the wizard
Of the blizzard
Has shut off his biting blow,
When the morning's gold has busted
Like a billow on the swamp,
From my cozy,
Rosy, posy
Nest I fly with Persian pomp.
Oh, my spirit's bright and sunny,
And joy's echoes in me wake,
When I pour the shining honey
On the
Buckwheat cake.

Oh, the frosty air is bitter,
And the poodle's eyeballs shine,
And the chicken,
Zero-stricken,
Roosts upon the horse's spine.
Oh, the snowdrifts gleam and glitter
With a gleaming, glaring glit,
And the sparrow,
To his marrow,
By old Boreas is hit,
Yet I listen to him chirrup
In the bramble and the brake,
While I pour the maple syrup
On the
Buckwheat cake.

Oh, I watch the dumpy possum,
As he wags his tail in glee,
While he's rooting,
Or a-scooting,
To escape the fricassee.
With his nose a frozen blossom
Doth the small boy now appear
At the gateway,
And he straightway
Moulds of snow the deadly sphere.
And I see the man who passes
On his ear that snowball take,
While I pour the rich molasses
On the
Buckwheat cake.
—New York Journal.

THE COMEDY OF MR. TUCKER.

"Ma?"

No answer. There was a gentle clatter of china in the kitchen and a smell of steaming soapsuds.

"Ma, I say?" The call came this time from the head of the stairs.

"Well, what is it?"

"I want my clean shirt."

"It's right there in your drawer, just where I put it."

"I can't find it."

Mrs. Tucker wiped her hands hastily on the towel as she crossed the room. The stairs were built in the wall and she laid her hand against it going up; it was the third time she had been upstairs that morning.

"There!" she exclaimed triumphantly in her good-hearted tone, drawing forth the desired article; "just where I said 'twas.""

"I thought that was another one," answered her husband. "Ain't you 'most through? You'll be late."

"No, I guess not."

It was a sweet Sunday morning in June and the sunshine struck glints of gold from the surface of the grass blades. The sky was a clear, rain-washed blue; the fragrance of wild rose was abroad in the air. Mrs. Tucker looked out of the kitchen door at the old horse switching his tail at the gate. He, too, wore a Sunday aspect. "I'd like to sit down and take it all in," she thought to herself. "There'll be the ride to church, anyway."

Presently there came another call from above. "Hurry up! You'll make me late."

"S'pose so," said Mrs. Tucker silently, now resigned to her fate. It seemed to Almira Tucker at times as if she had been "hurrying up" all her life.

When she went upstairs Mr. Tucker was standing in his shirt sleeves before the glass, chin out and mouth drawn to one side, as he wrestled with his collar button. She stopped to fasten it for him before sitting down to put on her shoes, then, standing behind him, she craned her neck over his shoulder to see how her back hair looked. He did not move and she did not seem to expect it.

"I wish you'd fix this tie, Almiry. I can't make it come right.""

"Just a minute, Isr'el."

He shifted his position uneasily from one foot to the other. "I can't wait all day."

His wife dropped the just arranged waves of her front hair in disorder, and tied the necktie. There was not a neater or more "particular" man in town than Israel Tucker, and she was proud of the fact. His stiff shirt bosoms never broke in the wrong place.

"I'll be all ready by the time you get unhitched," she said, breathlessly, darting here and there as he put on his Sunday coat and vest. "Yes, Isr'el, I'm coming!" she called a few moments later. "Oh, dear! I always get so flustrated. Well, I can put on my gloves 's we go along."

"Oh, my! Ain't it a pretty day?" she exclaimed, now quite serene again. "Don't those daisies look like a lot 'o children havin' a party? See 'em bowin' an' dancin'. How pretty pink those roses are!"

"Well enough," said Mr. Tucker, indulgently. The patronizing toleration of the unimaginative temperament for what is beyond its grasp is a secret spring of glee to the humorous mind. Mrs. Tucker was not definitely conscious, however, of anything unsatisfying. She "took Isr'el just 's she found him."" After all, they had much in common.

After church they drove to their married daughter's to dinner. Emmeline lived in the village. Mrs. Tucker always felt this visit to be something of an event. It was the only day in the week when she could sit still in her best black silk and see someone else "fly around." Emmeline loved to fly around. She was young and plump and inexhaustible. She rushed up to her mother as soon as the buggy stopped, and twitched her collar into shape. "I did'nt want to tell you in church, but you got your collar on crooked again. Now, come right in. Don't you do anything, ma—sit where you are. I'm going to have chicken for dinner."

It was pleasant to see her little airs of position and hospitality. "Shall I cut up your lettuce for you, Henry?" she asked at table.

"If you want to," answered her husband, a thin, dark man with a rather discouraged expression. "I wish the pesky stuff would grow cut up, for my part."

They all laughed. Later on in the meal reference was made to something in the weekly newspaper. Emmeline at once jumped up and brought it to him.

"Why didn't you let him go?" asked Mrs Tucker afterward. She was thinking complacently, "Emmeline's got a good home."

"Well, I knew just where it was."

"You don't want to do for him in every single thing. Let him wait on you some. It's just as well to begin right."

Emmeline came to a standstill opposite. Her eyes had a jocose light in them; her round, good-humored face was like her mother's.

"Now, ma, I'd just like to know how much more I do than you've been doing for pa as far back as I can remember?"

"Well, maybe so," said Mrs. Tucker, surprised. The matter had never been so forcibly presented to her before. On their way home that afternoon she thought it over. She had the ability, rare in women who lead restricted lives, to face a situation and sum it up from an impersonal point of view. She was doing this now.

What Emmeline said was true. All her married life she had waited on her husband hand and foot until he had become so wonted to it as hardly to be able to get along without her help; and it had been a wonder to her, in the infrequent trips which he made to the city how he managed to dress himself unaided. She had found his belongings for him and put them away for years, and he expected it. Did he call she dropped everything and ran to him; it had been so much easier to run than to tell him what to do. She realized now that it was this that kept her always in a hurry. "The Tuckers always did take a sight of attention," she thought, with no sense of grievance. "Well, he is as he is, I suppose."

Nevertheless, when Mr. Tucker stopped on his way out to harness the horse next Sunday, to remark that he hoped she wasn't going to keep him waiting a whole half-hour again, she made a stand for herself.

"I'll be ready soon enough if you won't call me away from my work."

"It ain't that," said Mr. Tucker, in a tone of conscious superiority; "it's something else. I don't know how 'tis, but a woman never can get ready to go anywhere without fussin'."

"Well, you look after your own things today and I'll tend to mine—then we'll see."

Mr. Tucker came in and went upstairs. Presently his voice called:

"Is the water hot?"

"Yes," said Mrs. Tucker, rubbing her spoons with cheerful energy.

There was silence for two or three minutes, then the voice called again, a little imperatively: "I asked you if the water was hot?"

"Hot enough for shavin'; better come an' get it right off."

"I can't—I ain't fixed to."

"You can fix yourself well enough to come down; there's nobody passin'."

Mr. Tucker didn't look exactly "fixed" as he limped crossly downstairs in heelless slippers, with his suspenders dangling and his old shirt bulging out at the back in an extraordinary manner. "I didn't know you was so put to it 't you couldn't hand up a dipper of water," he observed with sarcasm.

"Well, I ain't a goin' to have you tell me I'm late this time," said his wife.

Soon he called again: "Where'd you put those socks of mine, Almiry?"

"Just where I told you—righthand corner of your drawer."

"I can't find 'em."

"Well, you look again an' I guess you will."

Strange sounds arose overhead; shoving sounds; squeaking, rattling sounds; a tramping back and forth. Over Mrs. Tucker's face stole an irrepressible smile of pure enjoyment. "Great doin's goin' on," she said, deftly turning over the dishpan and hanging the towels up to dry. "I declare, I'm about through!"

She entered her room. The bureau drawer that held Mr. Tucker's linen had been taken out bodily and dumped upon the bed; it looked as if a cyclone had whirled through it. Hanging over the edge were various nondescript bundles, partly unrolled; some even strewed the floor. Mrs. Tucker paid no outward attention, though her orderly mind was dismayed. She disported herself leisurely before the glass, smoothing her hair and pinning her collar with the utmost nicety. Behind her stood her husband, dodging his head from side to side.

"What is the matter?"

"I can't see anything while you take up the whole lookin' glass."

"You can see over my head just as well as I can over yours. Want anything?"

He would not answer until she looked up. Then he pointed to his tie.

"As soon as I've put on my bonnet. Why, what makes you fidget so? Get your coat an' vest on if you want to be doing something."

Five minutes afterward Mrs. Tucker might have been seen in the ample sitting-room door with her striped Sunday shawl on her arm, occasionally glancing over her shoulder, for her husband was behind time. As he finally appeared, warm and tired, she remarked, pleasantly: "You see I was all ready."

Mr. Tucker apparently did not hear. He got stiffly into the buggy. It was not until the end of the day that his wife discovered that he had worn socks that were not mates.

Now it happened that their nearest neighbor besought Mrs. Tucker to pay her a visit that week. "You're almost a stranger, Almiry," said she; "can't you and Mr. Tucker come to tea toward the end of the week?"

"I'd be pleased," answered Mrs. Tucker. "Mr. Tucker's busier'n common just now with the hayin,' but perhaps he could come along late in the afternoon and go home with me."

Mr. Tucker, however, would make no promise. "I'll see about it," was what he said. The day was so warm that Mrs. Tucker went to the storeroom to get out a certain black and white sprigged lawn, which she kept for the hottest weather, and which had not been worn that season. The store closet was built around the chimney. It was too small for a room, too large for a closet, and it had a little bit of a window near the floor that would not open. Mrs. Tucker was all ready to go when she saw that she had left the door unfastened, and she stepped back and turned the button.

It proved to be an enjoyable afternoon, though Mr. Tucker did not come to tea. "I don't suppose it was so he could get away," Mrs. Tucker explained, apologetically; "the hay's ripenin' so fast." She was disappointed herself, for she enjoyed her husband's society at times—he "made a good appearance in company." On this account she returned early in the evening, holding her muslin skirts well up to keep them out of the dust. Contrary to their usual twilight habit, the side door was closed. Everything looked just as she had left it. She hooked back the door and opened a window to let in the fresh air. It went up with a bang. Rat-a-tat; rat-atat! What was that? Mrs. Tucker's pulse jumped wildly; both her hands sprung up as she listened. There it was again! A loud thump-thump going on upstairs.

"Mercy! What can it be. Where's Isr'el that he don't hear the noise? It can't——" Awful fears chased her as, dragging her everyday hat by one string, she rushed upstairs where the sounds, louder and louder, guided her straight to the storeroom door.

There was no mistaking the animating motive of those blows; rage, wordless and impotent rage, was venting itself in regular pounding thwacks like a battering ram inside that closet; the door trembled under them. Mrs. Tucker turned the button and the door shot forward with the force of a catapault. A tall, burly form, partly white and partly black in the dusk, stepped forth.

"Isr'el Putnam Tucker, how you scaret me! How came you there?"

Did Israel Putnam Tucker deign to reply? Not he. He stalked majestically across the hall with a measured tread that lost none of its impressiveness from his being in his shirt sleeves. His wife followed at his heels, all agitation and remorse.

"You don't say you was in that closet all the aft'noon? Why, the awful! Why didn't you speak? Why didn't you say something? I was in a hurry an' I suppose you didn't have time. An' the boy was way over in the lot, wa'n't he? Of course, he couldn't hear you. I'm dreadful sorry, Isr'el. I wouldn't done it for anything if I'd known. Such a hot day, too! I'm afraid you'll be sick. Your face is just purple."

This was going just too far. Mr. Tucker lifted his free hand (the other held his vest and wilted collar) in a single determined gesture, as one who should say: "Avaunt!" He might have been posed just so on a pedestal for a statue of his namesake. Then looking neither to right nor left, he marched downstairs.

Consternation made Mrs. Tucker's round eyes rounder and puckered all her face; something else divided her swift mind, something that wanted to be amusement, and had no kindred soul to share it with.

"Oh, my, he's just full of mad!" she soliloquized. "Don't blame him. So'd I be if I'd been shut up four or five hours in that little closet; only I'd been thinkin' some how comical 'twas, and kind o' makin' a story of it to tell afterward, an' he don't get any comfort that way."

Mr. Tucker came in from the yard after awhile, and sat down in the door with his newspaper. His wife fluttered about anxiously. "Let me make you a glass of lemonade, Isr'el," she suggested.

The top of Mr. Tucker's head above the newspaper waved decidedly from side to side.

"I won't ask him; I'll go make it," thought his better half; "he hasn't had any supper, either."

The pungent freshness of lemon peel and the tinkle of the spoon in the pitcher were pleasant things that warm night, and Mr. Tucker's senses seemed to greet them with approval; but as his wife set the glass beside him he looked askance at it and spoke for the first time: "I don't want it."

"Do drink it, Isr'el, it'll cool you off."

"I don't want it."

She said no more, but carried the glass out to the kitchen and left it in the window. By and by Mr. Tucker arose, and, with his eyes still on the paper, sauntered casually out that way. When Mrs. Tucker went into the pantry to stir up bread the glass was empty, and an immense wedge was gone from the berry pie she had baked that morning. She looked pleased.

"Well, I guess he won't starve," she said.

"What makes pa so solemn?" asked Emmeline next Sunday. "He acts just's he did at the time those bunko men took him in at Hartford."

"Now, Emmeline, you mustn't say one word." Mrs. Tucker was really aching to tell the story. She told it dramatically because it was her nature. If it had been a joke against herself it would have been the same. Emmeline dropped the flour seive and plumped herself down on a stool in the pantry—she also was dramatic.

"Oh, ma," she said, "I shall give up!" "There-sh-h! You mustn't do so."

It is hard to know how to treat a man in the sulks. You can punish a little boy who does not behave to please you, whether you are right or wrong, for he is the under dog; but what can you do with a little boy of fifty-seven? For a week Mr. Tucker showed a surprising propensity for keeping himself in evidence. He would come in from the farm at all hours of the day and institute elaborate searches for unknown articles, and if his wife asked him what he was looking for or begged to help him he invariably turned a deaf ear. He found numberless things requiring his immediate attention within sight of the kitchen door. It was not that he wanted to be near at hand to answer if spoken to and not answer. He also developed a rigid independence to his toilet. He could look after himself, he guessed; he didn't want any meddling with his things. One rainy day he was busy for some time upstairs, and later on his wife found out that he had been turning out the contents of his bureau drawers and rearranging them after an original conception of his own. By this time she would have worn sackcloth and ashes, if sackcloth and ashes had anything to do with the case. He even refused assistance with his collars, going so far as to trim off the frayed edges of an old one to wear to town meeting, much to her mortification, and on Sunday, while driving to church, as she saw his checked necktie sliding around to his ear and ventured to replace it, he deliberately put up his left hand and shoved it around again. Then she knew he was very mad.

Of course, it wore off in time; but a touch of new independence remained, and another result less palpable perhaps, a shading off, as it were, of the undisturbed self-importance which had hitherto marked his demeanor. A man cannot be confined four or five hours in a closet on a broiling day in July, from circumstances over which he has no control, and preserve intact his sense of conscious superiority over all inanimate things. Even a stout wooden button of his own fashioning may be a sufficient agent to enlarge his views.

The instruments that shape our ends are not always such as we would choose ourselves. It is a curious fact, yet true, that nothing had ever done Israel Tucker more good than being shut up in that closet.

In the first sharp days of fall Mrs. Tucker fell sick, and when she recovered the doctor told her husband that her heart was weak. "You must see to it now that she doesn't overdo," he said. "Make her sit down more, and not stoop over or reach up, or get tired out."

He was a young doctor and very able. Israel went to the door to see him drive out of the yard in his mud-splashed buggy. He did not go back to the room where his wife was. He looked out of the end window. Little was to be seen from the window, and that little he did not see, but he stood there some time.

It was a trial to the able-bodied woman, whose life had been spent in taking steps for others, to give up her active ways and let many things go undone. Israel did his best to follow the doctor's instructions. He did more; he began in a feeble, rudimentary fashion to take care of her. At first it seemed to Mrs. Tucker more bother than use. She expressed herself quite openly about it. She had never been a scold, but she had had her own way in that kitchen. His fingers were all thumbs. When he broke the handle off the sugar bowl trying to make her a cup of tea she felt that the whole household was going to rack and ruin and told him so.

By-and-by it began to give her a certain pleasure to see Israel stepping about the house, bringing her her shawl or placing a footstool for her. He had never done those things before, even when courting; he had supposed that she knew enough to take care of herself.

One day she sat in her room while Israel, on his knees beside her, struggled over her shoes with the buttonhook. His sleek, gray head and busy, work-hardened hands were pleasant in her eyes. She suddenly threw her arms around his neck and kissed him. And I suppose she had not done it like that since she was young.

Our New England emotions are like our bottled cider; they have a tang of their own, but the cork comes out hard, and not always without an explosion.

"Oh, Isr'el," said she, "you're so good. I don't like to make you do so much for me all the time."

Israel looked up. He was not smiling, but in his sober face there was a look as of one who was slowly rising to the occasion.

"You might as well get used to it," he said. "Doctor said to see to you some, an' I'm going to do it."

"But I don't want you should wait on me so much—I don't need it."

"I ain't said yet I didn't like it," answered Israel.—New York Tribune.

A Comforting Text.

The late Mayor Howland, of Toronto, called one day on a poor, sick woman and as usual read a portion of scripture and offered prayer. On leaving he named a passage of scripture which he thought would give comfort. The husband of the sick woman was incensed that Mr. Howland should have left no more substantial evidence of sympathy and gave expression to his anger in vigorous language. After a little the Bible was opened again, and a $10 bill was found. The angry man went at once to Mr. Howland and offered his humble apologies, and at the funeral of his benefactor there was not a more sincere mourner than the one who had failed to understand that there is more than one way of bestowing charity.

Nobody but a woman will carry a watch without keeping it wound up.

FARM AND GARDEN

Farm Conveniences of Cement.

The use of cement for stable floors is becoming more and more general each year. There are other uses for the same material about a farm, two of which are suggested in the accompanying illustrations. One is a cement watering trough made by using two wooden boxes of different sizes to form a mold. Put in a thick layer of cement, sharp sand and sharp gravel well mixed upon the bottom of the larger box, then set upon this the smaller box, as shown in the first picture, and fill in about the sides. If a vent is desired, in the bottom or side, put a round bit of wood in the position where the opening is desired, as the cement is being filled in. The second convenience is a lawn and garden roller. Get a sheet of sheet iron and fit a disc of wood into one end to make it a perfect cylinder. Bore a hole in the exact center of the disc to insert an iron rod. Place on end, with the disc end down. Select a round iron rod for the core of the roller, and drive it, through the hole in the disc, a few inches into the ground, keeping the rod exactly in the center of the cylinder at the top. The mold, as seen in the second illustration, is now ready to fill with cement. A light handle is attached to the iron center, and the roller is complete. Use the best cement, the sharpest of sand and gravel and mix thoroughly, that every particle of the cement may be wet. Round off all sharp edges when the articles are taken from the molds.

CEMENT ROLLER.

Digging a Well by Horse Power.

Horse power is cheaper than human muscle. To use the former in well digging, set four timbers, 4 by 4 in. firmly in the ground over the well hole and bolt together at the top. At A attach a strong rope, run it through a pulley, as at B, through another suspended from the top of the framework, and finally through a pulley at D and to the whiffletree. The horse can easily raise the dirt which is shoveled into the box or other carrier, as at E, after being lowered. Two 2 in. boards are laid as at H H in the cut. F F are also 2 in. boards, fastened at one end and loose at the other so they can be spread apart to allow the box E to descend into the well. When it comes up loaded they are again placed as shown in the illustration and the box rests upon them. The track, K, is of plank and convenient for drawing the box over it to be emptied. A small truck can be run under the box after it is raised, over the track K and on the cross pieces F F. This makes unloading much easier. A short sled, built after the fashion of a stone boat, has also been found convenient for dragging it away by horse.—Farm and Home.

WELL DIGGING MADE EASY.

Well-Managed Orchards.

An orchard well managed may be made to pay several times as much for the land occupied and the labor spent as the best field on the farm. But it will be a poor investment if it is neglected and suffered to go to ruin. Cultivation is indispensable to enable the soil to contribute its fertility to the trees. The surface must not be left untouched to become covered with rank weeds or moss, to lie bare and barren. There is nothing better than a crop of clover, and this should be permitted to die down and decay on the surface. A plow should never be suffered in an orchard, says the New York Times. Only the surface should be stirred, lest the fine feeding roots may be injured and the trees checked in their growth. A good harrowing in the fall and two or three in the summer will be all the cultivation an orchard requires.

Feeding Stock on Browse.

In times of scarcity cattle are sometimes driven to the woods and allowed to feed on the twigs of young trees growing near the ground, or of the top boughs of trees that have been felled for this purpose. The bass wood is the best of trees for this purpose, though twigs of the beech were often thought nearly as good. It is on such feed as this that deer largely subsist in cold weather, when the snow is too deep for them to reach the ground. But if much stock has to be kept on browse, it requires more labor than to cut and cure hay after the ground has once been seeded, and the hay is also much more nutritious than the twigs, which are very largely only woody fibre.—Exchange.

Farming with One Horse.

There are already very many small farms where the expense of keeping two horses is greater than the profit from the land will stand. As population becomes more condensed the number of such farmers is sure to increase. With light plows suitable to be drawn by one horse a good deal of plowing may be done. If still faster plowing is desired, two farmers, each working a single horse, may unite their forces. This is the way that French farmers do, and we have seen the same practice near some American cities. It is chiefly in drawing manure that the two-horse team is most essential, for it is the practice to make the manure box very large so that two good horses are required to draw it.—Cultivator.

What to Do with Fat Hens.

When a hen becomes very fat she not only is a poor layer, but will become broody, have leg weakness, and be unfit for anything but the pot. Such hens should be fed only once a day, at night, the meal to consist of a pound of lean meat to twenty hens, with a handful of grain scattered for them to hunt up. They will then be hungry during the day, will search and work for food, while the inducement of a few grains thrown out at night will cause them to keep at work until late. Meat contains little fat-producing elements, if lean, and will greatly promote laying as soon as the surplus fat is removed, which can only be done by compelling the hens to exercise.

Planning for Soiling.

It is very rare of late years that a season is found when there is good pasture all through the year. Usually the dry spell comes late in summer or early in the fall, just the time when the best soiling crops are ready to help out the deficiencies of pasture. The reason why more farmers do not sow soiling crops in spring is because their land is not ready to produce the crop that will make soiling profitable. Preparations for soiling ought to begin at least the fall or winter before. Draw out and spread a good coating of manure on land to be drilled with corn next spring, and it will do far more good than if the manure were applied then.

How to Improve a Lawn.

Lawns can be kept green and thickset without the use of stable manure. City and village people who have a few square rods of grass, usually imagine it necessary to keep the plot covered for weeks with badly scented and ill-looking manure, when the fact is that one-half the money's worth of nitrate of soda and powdered phosphate of lime will answer better and create no nuisance. They furnish to the soil what is most needed, an alkali, phosphoric acid and nitrogen. Both of them are inodorous and show their effects immediately on application.—New York Tribune.

Horse Notes.

If you raise the right kind of horses the buyer will hunt you up.

See that the shoer fits the shoe to the foot, and not the foot to the shoe.

The cause of a vicious disposition in a horse is often rough treatment in grooming.

Too much feed is as bad as too little, especially when the horses have but little to do.

Never allow anyone to tickle or tease your horse in the stable. The animal only feels the torment, and does not understand the joke.

The farmer who has the care of young colts should make up his mind not to let them lose a pound of flesh at weaning time. The colt should pass his first winter in the best of condition, and without a hitch in his growth.—Western Rural.

The French Queens.

Of sixty-seven queens of France only thirteen have died without leaving their histories a record of misery. Eleven were divorced, two executed nine died young, seven were soon widowed, three cruely treated, three exiled; the poisoned and broken-hearted make up the rest.

It seems peculiar that Christian peers should be arrayed against a Christian nation for endeavoring to stop the butcheries of bigotry, ignorance and superstition. Greece in her invasion of Crete has done nothing different from the other nations except that she has gone a step farther.

The senate has passed a bill regulating the width of tires on wagons and other vehicles used upon public roads. The purpose of the bill is to save the roads from damage by narrow tires. The proposed law provides that the width of the tire be graduated according to the load carried by the vehicle.

The Secretary of the Interior has ruled to the effect that where the book and page of the record of the location certificate has not been given in the published notice for the application of a patent to a mining claim, the application is defective and must be made over again, although the receiver's receipt may have been issued.

A bill has been introduced in both houses of the Legislature, which has for its object the enforced care of illegitimate offspring by the father when the parentage has been legally ascertained. A similar law has for years been upon the statute books of England. The law there requires the weekly payment of the uniform sum of 3 shillings 6 pence by the father.

If England attempts to take a part in the subjugation by force of King George and his troops, Lord Salisbury's Government is likely to be driven from office by force of public opinion. The English people were pretty thoroughly worked up by the Armenian troubles, and their intense hatred of the cruel Turk has not been modified by developments in Crete.

All the sensational stories published lately about the resignation of General Lee as consul-general to Havana because the government would not properly protect American citizens in Cuba, turn out to be unfounded. General Lee handed a statement to an Associated Press reporter yesterday in which he denies that he has resigned. The officials in the Secretary of States office say there has been no call for a warship to go to Cuba, and the entire sensation falls to the ground.

President Cleveland signalized Washington's birthday by issuing thirteen proclamations concerning forest reservations and the preservation of the trees thereon. This is an important action. The preservation of the forest and shrubbery growth in the mountains serves to make more valuable the mountains as reservoirs for the arid regions. The proclamations carry with them severe penalties for violations of the law.

Without entering into confusing detail, it may be said that the Torrens Land Bill is a device for eliminating the cost of transferring title, simplifying the transfer, making the whole system of titles to real estate comprehensible, doing away with title insurance companies, searchers of record, examiners of land titles, lawyers and middle men, and bringing the buyer and seller face to face on a comprehensible basis where each and both know exactly what ther are doing without the intervention of costly advice.

Reports from all parts of California are to the effect that prospects for farmers' stock breeders orchardists and vineyardists were never better. Thousands of acres of land that have not been cultivated for years are now covered with a mantle of tender blades of growing grain, while the hillsides and valleys have an emerald richness that betokens plenty of feed for stock of all kinds. Orchards in every direction are presenting a beautiful combination of colors, blossoms of every hue are hiding the bare limbs and branches: vines are budding everywhere, and as the owners are restfng from their labors they find, in reviewing the markets of the world that good prices will surely prevail throughout the year.

The whole State is looking to this Legislature to pass a comprehensive primary election law. The growing evils of methods by which parties and conventions have been constituted and controlled to the present time have compelled the attention of all voters. The system has become intolerable, and a full reform is demanded. Under present conditions the great mass of the voters have no voice in the government of the parties that they follow. The system of choosing delegates to the nominating convention, of naming candidates and of organizing and managing the parties favors the growth of bosses in cities and of courthouse rings in the counties. The management of parties is the despotism of boss rule or ring rule tempered by fear of defeat at the polls. Under this system there is almost no way in which unscrupulous men can be dislodged from the party management, once they get in control. The men who "own the works" can name the conventions and hold the organization as long as they can keep a few hundred followers in their service. The system leads to the government of parties by minorities. It shuts the majority out from any further participation in party affairs than a ratification or defeat of the decision of the leaders when the ticket or policy is put to the test of the polls.

Sad Death of a Former Inyo Girl.

On Tuesday last the sad news was telegraphed Mrs. F. E. Densmore that her sister, Miss Cora Craig had just passed quietly away after a sudden change for the worse that lasted but two hours. Although it was generally known that the young girl had been afflicted with consumption for several months past, the disease had not assumed a serious form apparently, and the news of her death was a terrible shock to her sister and her many friends here. She was nineteen years old last August. When the family went from here to Redlands two years ago, Cora left a host of friends who loved her for her sweet nature and bright vivacious manner, for she was developing into a beautiful woman. Death, awful at all times, seems doubly terrible when he mows down one of these fair flowers in the very springtime of life. The deepest sympathy of the community is with the bereaved family.

Raising Horses

Charley Collins passed through town on Tuesday on his way home from Los Angeles. He brought back with him a handsome Shire stallion, registered weighing over 1,800 pounds. The Collins Bros. own quite a number of well-bred Shire mares, which will be mated this spring with this stallion. Heavy draft horses always command a good figure in the city markets, and there is no better business than in raising them, providing it is properly handled. The young colts should be weaned in the fall and fed in the winter, and all the stock well fed and cared for. The too common practice in this country of breeding any kind of a mare to any horse which happens to be handy, turning them out to range from year's end to year's end, weaning their colts as best they can and leaving the colts to rustle for themselves, results in a lot of scrubs that are not even fit for hog feed. Properly handled, the horse business is all right.

Gems From Jim Townsend.

We are indebted to the Bodie Miner-Index for the following:

Next Wednesday will be the beginning of Lent. For forty days and nights we will go hungry but not very thirsty.

It is singular, isn't it, that some men will buy a haystack from a stranger for cash and refuse to trade with a friend for a toothpick on credit.

Governor Budd has appointed A. S. Cooper of Santa Barbara to be State Mineralogist, to take the place of J. Crawford, term expired.

Copper seems to be king now. The leading nations of Europe want all they can get, and it is being shipped from this country in enormous quantities.

Last Tuesday morning was the coldest of the season. From 1 o'clock until daylight the mercury maintained itself at a north pole notch—24 below nothing. It was cold enough to chill the conscience of an undertaker.

Dangers of the Grip

The greatest danger from La Grippe is of its resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough remedy taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of this dread disease. It will effect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

From Cripple Creek.

After the big fire in Cripple Creek I took a severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. HENDERSON, editor Daily Advertiser. For sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

MOTOR AND MISERY.

Compressed air as a motive power for street railways will in time supersede electric wires and the trolley. Necessity and invention make rapid changes, but some old, sure, unfailing methods will hold good for all time. The nerves are the electric wires of the human system, and often "jangle out of tune," as when neuralgia slips the trolley of the system and it grinds and groans with pain. The old motor for the cure of pain, St. Jacobs Oil, will always act as electric influence on the pain stricken nerves, and will send a current of cure through the disordered wires, and bring about a perfect restoration. Nothing new can improve upon what is known to be the best and surest in the treatment of painful diseases.

How Grant Got the Name of Ulysses.

The story was curious. As related by the father afterward, it appeared that the common difficulty of choosing a name for the babe arose. Multitudes of suggestions only confused the young parents the more, until at last it was proposed to cast the names into a hat. This was done. A romantic aunt suggested Theodore. The mother favored Albert, in honor of Albert Gallatin. Grandfather Simpson voted for Hiram, because he considered it a handsome name. The drawing resulted in two names, Hiram and Ulysses.

Ulysses, it is said, was cast into the hat by Grandmother Simpson, who had been reading a translation of Fenelon's "Telemachus" and had been much impressed by the description of Ulysses given by Mentor to Telemachus. "He was gentle of speech, beneficent of mind." "The most patient of men." "He is the friend of truth. He says nothing that is false, but when it is necessary he concedes what is true. His wisdom is a seal upon his lips, which is never broken save for an important purpose."—Hamlin Garland in McClure's.

The miter worn by the Jewish high priest was a kind of diadem, resembling a turban in shape. On the front was a gold plate, fastened by a blue ribbon and engraved with the inscription, "Holiness to the Lord."

From Penang to New York a letter requires 35 days to make the journey.

THE LIVERY OF BILIOUSNESS

Is a pronounced yellow. It is visible in the countenance and eyeball. It is accompanied with uneasiness beneath the right ribs and shoulder blade, sick headache, nausea and irregularity of the bowels. To the removal of each and all of these discomforts, as well as their cause, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is admirably adapted. This pre-eminent family medicine also remedies malarial rheumatic and kidney complaints, nervousness and debility. It promotes appetite and sleep.

"Nothing," says Scribbler, "is more disheartening to a man than the discovery that he has married a woman who loves to keep his writing table in order.

Pimples, blotches, boils, black heads, moth-patches and scrofulous sores disappear never to return by using Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters.

She—And did your friend take the doctor's advice? He—Certainly. "And did he pay for it?" "Well, I should rather say he did! He's dead!"

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters tones the stomach and digestive organs, cures dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, and all ills produced by a disordered stomach.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Colored physicians of South Carolina have formed a State organization.

The number of volumes circulated by the free libraries of New York city during the year is estimated at 1,500,000.

The Kiel canal is lighted over its sixty-two miles by electricity and is the longest distance in the world lighted continuously in that way. There are 5,000 poles.

According to a recent order of the Secretary of War the dimensions of the standard United States flags are five feet six inches by four feet four inches. The order also provides for the new colors to be issued to all infantry and artillery regiments and the battalions of engineers, and also to all regiments of cavalry.

The fetes commemorating the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of the sea route to India by Vasco Da Gama were to have been held at Lisbon next year, but have now been postponed until May, 1898. It was in the month of May, 400 years ago, counting from 1898, that the great navigator arrived at Callcut.

The import of iron into Russia in 1894 amounted to 857,859 tons, consisting of 170,467 tons of raw iron and 687,392 tons of wrought iron, steel, machinery and other iron products, against 570,317 tons imported in 1893; consequently the total amount of iron consumed in Russia in 1894 was 2,304,145 tons, being 453,658 tons more than in 1893.

A smart young man in Kansas employed his father to work for him during the month of December, offering him 1 cent the first day, 2 cents the second, 4 the third, and so on, doubling the amount every succeeding day. He was surprised when his figuring showed that at the end of thirty days he owed the "old man" just $10,737.23.

A bill drafted by Henry L. Clinton will be presented in the coming New York Legislature providing that persons acquitted of murder on the ground of insanity shall not be immediately released from custody, as Marie Barberi was, but kept under restraint in an asylum for not less than ten years, subject to release by the Governor.

Governor Atkinson of Georgia has signed an anti-trust bill, recently passed by the Legislature of that State, which puts under the ban all "arrangements, contracts, agreements, trusts or combinations made with a view to lessen or which may tend to lessen" free competition in the importation, manufacture or sale of any article or product.

A peculiarity of high buildings is attracting interest in New York since the building inspectors have honored the structures with belated attention. It has been learned that many of them swerved fully a foot from the upright during the recent hurricane, though this, by experts, is cited as a proof of their strength. A well-known photographer near Fifth avenue, who is next to the roof of a skyscraper, found that the tremulous motion injured his negatives, and hit upon a queer expedient of overcoming this. He has constructed a gigantic tank with pontoons to float his machinery, and no amount of listing now interferes with his business.

The University Medical College of New Orleans has undertaken an enterprise which promises excellent results. It has determined to establish a training school for negro women as nurses. The object is to supply well-trained nurses who will serve for moderate pay. The trained nurses who are now in New Orleans are not numerous enough to meet the demand, and they are paid for their services at a rate which many people who need them cannot afford. It is believed that the negro nurses to be trained at the new establishment will find employment and serve a good purpose without interfering at all with the white women who are engaged in similar work.

Andrew Jackson's Way.

Although the government pays the rank and file of its employes greater salaries than they would be likely to command in private business, with shorter hours and easier work on an average, the days of the impecunious clerk in Washington are by no means ended. So writes a Companion correspondent, who goes on to say:

The cabinet officers take the ground that the departments cannot be used as debt-collecting agencies, but at the same time they see to it that employment shall not be given to those who can, but will not, pay their bills. An old gentleman said to your correspondent the other day that he recalled a very interesting incident which occurred in Jackson's administration.

Among the clerks in the Treasury Department at that time was a young man who had a chronic disinclination to pay his board bill. His landlady was a widow in needy circumstances, but was unable to get a cent out of him. He gave his notes with Micawber-like cheerfulness, and they went to protest with clock-like regularity. Finally she went one day to the White House and called upon the President.

She told her story, and as she proceeded Jackson's eyes began to snap in a dangerous manner. He told her that she ought to be paid, and requested her to get the clerk's note for the amount. The lady replied that she was unable to pay the costs of the protest, but the President assured her that this time there would be no such expense.

She went over to the Treasury, and had no difficulty in getting the young fellow's note for thirty days for the full amount of the indebtedness. Then she carried it to the White House. The President glanced at it and wrote on the back, "Andrew Jackson."

"Now, madam," said he, "put that in the bank, and we will see which one of us will have to pay you the money."

The note was deposited for collection, and it is needless to add, was paid by the clerk, who afterward went to see President Jackson, apologized, and promised to mend his ways.

"Botanical Names."

Some people whose botanical learning is not very deep are passing fond of using Latin names for plants and flowers. A London journal tells of a garden in Brixton, near that city, which is kept by an old gentleman who delights to have all his plants labelled with high-sounding "botanical names"—it does not matter in the least what; and so some of his more learned friends have helped him to distinguish appellations.

He has, for instance, a bank of roses, the plants in which bear these labels: Nux-vomica, Nisi prius, Ipecacuanha peruviana, Particeps criminis.

It is easy to see to what professions the friends belonged who supplied the worthy gardener with these eminently scientific names. The gardener is proud of them, and they undoubtedly answer every purpose of the planter.

They remind one of the story of the Rev. Sydney Smith and the new-rich lady of Kensington. She was quite ignorant of either Latin or botany, but she had a fine conservatory, and she considered it a proof of her own cultivation to know the botanical names of all plants.

These names she committed carefully to memory, and one day, when Mr. Smith called, she took him to the conservatory and reeled them all off to him. She showed him the Pelargonium quercifolium and the Cheiranthus Ieanus and the Mezembryanthemum and the Amygdalus persica, and scores of other such high-sounding names—which were, after all, but common flowers and fruits.

Sydney Smith listened until he was tired, and then, turning to the lady, asked:

"Madam, have you the Rubeola morbillis?"

The lady stopped short. What in the world might the Rubeola morbillis be? She had not the slightest idea. But she did not wish to display her ignorance. It might be something familiar of which she had not learned the name—and the name was pretty, anyway. So she put on a bold face and replied:

"Not just now; but I had it last year, and gave it to as many of my neighbors as I could."

"Ah! Did you, indeed?" said the great clergyman, and left her ignorant of the fact that he had simply asked if she had had the measles!

Two Billions for Pensions.

One of the most striking facts in the report of the Interior Department is that during the last thirty-one years, or since the close of the civil war in 1865, the government has paid out for pensions, including the cost of distributing them, the enormous sum of $2,034,817,769.

The amount paid last year, $138,214,761.94, was nearly $600,000 less than that of the previous year, and far below that of 1893. Still, once more the prodigious annual sum of $141,000,000, which is more than double the average of the thirty-one years, is required, that being the estimate for the twelve months beginning July 1, 1897. It is, therefore, absolutely certain that the aggregate pension outlay since the war will, within three or four years, have exceeded the amount of the whole interest-bearing public debt, when at its climax. In fact, two and a half years more at the present rate of appropriations will put the pension expenditures at the top.

How is it that, nearly a generation after the close of the war, the pension outlay is fivefold greater than it was a dozen years after the war? For, in 1875, it was, if we have the correct figures, only $29,456,212; the next year, $28,257,396; the year following, $27,963,752; the year after that, $27,137,019.

The causes are three, one being the introduction of the policy of paying arrears of pensions to those who were put on the roll, as established under Hayes; a second, the opening of the rolls to new classes of pensioners, scores or hundreds of thousands strong, as, for example, in the dependent pension act; finally, the raising of the rates of pensions, which is a constant process, Secretary D. R. Francis, in his annual report, proposing to increase by 50 per cent one such class.

Commissioner Lochren long ago estimated that, in the ordinary course, the pension roll would be decreasing in number by the year 1895. But here is 1897 at hand, and ebb tide has not yet set in. There are now more pensioners than ever before. The latest figures give us 970,678 names on the roll; and, if a table before us is correct, the number for last year was 970,524; for the preceding year, 969,544; for the year before that, 966,012.—New York Sun.

Clocks in High Buildings.

There is one disadvantage about very tall buildings which is just now being noticed by the occupants. It involves some annoyance to those who have not made provision for it.

The trouble is the stopping of pendulum clocks by the vibration of the buildings. Many a pendulum clock that has kept accurate time for years in old-fashioned low structures has refused to run at all when moved into some one of the new tall steel-framed buildings in the lower part of the city. On the lower floors of the buildings the clocks run fairly well, but when higher up in the buildings they become more whimsical and on the top floors will not run at all.

Mr. Dunn, of the weather bureau, has a fine pendulum clock in the tower of the Manhattan Life Building, which has not done an honest day's work since the weather bureau was moved into the new offices. It has stopped so often that it is no longer to be relied upon. The pendulum swings continually, but only from the vibration of the building, as the clock has not been wound for weeks. The only relief is in replacing the pendulum clocks with others that have balance wheels.

Her Reason.

"Maria," said Mr. Dawson, "why do you always keep the window shades down? The house looks like a dungeon to me."

"I want to be able to say," his wife replied, "that my neighbors have called on me. You don't suppose that any of them would come if they could see from the outside what we've got, do you?"—Cleveland Leader.

TURNED HIS HAIR GRAY.

A SAN FRANCISCO DRUMMER'S CLOSE CALL.

George R. Hendrickson, a Well-known Traveling Man, Describes a Never-to-be-forgotten Experience—Thought He Was Going to be Launched Into Eternity.

From the Chronicle, San Francisco, Cal.

George R. Hendrickson, of 506 Market Street, San Francisco, Cal., is one of the best known commercial travelers on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Hendrickson has grown gray in the service, but his frosted hair and patriarchial beard are due more to an experience he had about three years ago, than to age.

"There was not much to hope for," said the old-time traveler when relating his experience yesterday, "and I never expected to take an order again. It is not a pleasant thing to contemplate, when walking along the street, to be seized with a sinking spell and think you are about to be launched into eternity. That was the condition of my existence for about six months. The doctors told me that I was suffering from nervous prostration. Well, I guess I was. I had had an attack of the grippe, and my complaint was the result of that disease. I consulted the best physicians in the town and took their medicine, but I grew no better. My stomach went back on me and I suffered all the ills that accompany nervous disorders.

"While under the care of the doctors I never knew what peace of mind was. The least sound coming unexpectedly threw me into a cold sweat, and caused chills to run up and down my back. I was subject to vertigo and every time I had an attack I feared that I wound drop to the sidewalk a corpse. I began to think I would be better off if dead, when I came across Dr. Williams' Pink Pills down in Los Gatos. I have studied medicine and recognized the value of the pills very readily. I threw my last bottle of medicine over the bridge at Los Gatos and began to take the pills. At once my condition began to improve. I got relief from the start and I determined to give the pills all the chance in the world. I went home and stayed there for three months, at the end of which time I was a new man, my health being completely restored."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregulatities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Delicious Snails of Provence.

The Provencal snails, which feed in a gourmet fashion upon vine leaves, are peculiarly delicious, and there was a murmur of delight from our company as the four women brought to the table four big dishes full of them, and for a while there was only the sound of eager munching, mixed with the clatter on china of the empty shells. To extract them we had the strong thorns, three or four inches long, of the wild acacia, and on these the little brown morsels were carried to the avid mouths and eaten with a bit of bread sopped in the sauce, and then the shell was subjected to a vigorous sucking, that not a drop of sauce lingering within it should be lost. —Thomas A. POETRY.

What It Is and What It Appears to Be at Varying Ages.

Ask the first half dozen people you meet "What is poetry?" and the result will be something like this: Five out of the six will look hurt at your springing such a question upon them and say lamely, "Oh, it's when the lines rhyme, you know!" and the sixth will be annoyed because, for the life of him, he can't say what it is and is afraid you'll think he doesn't know. As to the rhyming definition, beware how you accept it, innocent and simple as it looks. Applied, it will inevitably lead you to the conclusion that "Hamlet" and "Evangeline" aren't poetry, but that "Little Jack Horner" is.

The meaning of the word "poetry" varies, too, with our own age. Five-year-old thinks "Sing a Song o' Sixpence" and "Simple Simon" the greatest masterpieces of poetic thought; 15 won't look at either, but pores over the "Ingoldsby Legends," the "Ancient Mariner," and, for a change, the cheerful "Burial of Sir John Moore;" 20 dreams away Sunday afternoons over "Maud," and privately determines to be a Tennyson, too, some day, while 25 "hasn't time to read poetry."

There are two well known poems that always seem to me deserving of our greatest pity—"The Village Blacksmith" and "Casabianca." We give them all the little disagreeable jobs to do—all the kicks fall to their share, and none of the halfpence.

If a comic paper man is hard up for a joke, he falls back upon one or other of them, while the way they are both hacked and mangled and tortured in the schoolroom alone is positively cruel, and, outside its four walls, all the reward they get is general disfavor, to say nothing of social oblivion and derision.

But long after school has been left behind the boy of the burning deck and the smith with the brawny arms turn round upon us and take their revenge for all the obloquy and hard work heaped upon them.

They haunt us and bring in their train thoughts we would rather not think. We don't so much mind the memories of dingy schoolrooms and ink and tears and smudged copies that they force upon us, or even of half holidays spent in durance vile, but it is not of these alone that they remind us. No. They hint at the sad and foolish ignoble days and the long dead loves and hopes and aspirations that have filled our lives since, and we find ourselves contrasting what we are with what we were—too often, alas, a bitter thought!

After all, the greatest and best poetry is unwritten and will ever remain so. Our sweetest love songs come rippling over the meadows with the breeze that rocks the grasses in the long, soft summer evenings; our saddest dirges moan through the woods in the dark November days, when a damp mist hangs gray and pall-like over the hills and the dead leaves rustle as though swept by the feet of a ghostly funeral train, while for thrilling dramas and great, grand epics we need but to look round us into the faces and lives of living men and women.—Exchange.

New York Public Libraries.

The facts which The Book Buyer presents relating to the circulation of books in New York city through free circulating libraries cannot be questioned. Scant as is the aggregate number of books taken, when compared with the population, it is nevertheless satisfactory to learn that there are some few free libraries which can show that, as to readers, they have more. The following is from The Book Buyer's article:

How woefully New York is behind other cities of the country in bringing books within reach of the masses is seen from a comparison of the free circulating library systems. Last year, for example, there was a circulation in New York of something over 1,000,000 volumes by libraries that received a total appropriation from the city of $65,000. In the same year the Boston Public library circulated 850,000 volumes and received $175,000 from the city, the Chicago Public library circulated 1,150,000 volumes (the passion for reading being more general even than in Boston) and received $124,000, the Cleveland Public library circulated 595,000 volumes and received $60,000, and the St. Louis Public library received the same amount for a circulation of 331,000.

Luxury of Bankruptcy.

"Why don't you go into bankruptcy?" asked Judge Emden of the Lambeth county court, when Mr. Casswell, a sausage manufacturer of Camberwell, candidly admitted that he could not pay his debts except by small installments. "I am a poor man and can't afford it," replied the latter, who seemed to regard his honor's question as tantamount to asking a man with only twopence in his pocket why he did not treat himself to turtle soup and milk punch. Such luxuries as bankruptcy are not meant for the poor, and he sighed as he added, "You can't become bankrupt unless you have money." "Ah, yes," replied his honor, "quite true! A man in your position cannot indulge in the luxury of bankruptcy." So the unfortunate sausage maker was ordered to pay up at the rate of 10 shillings per month or go to jail for 14 days.—London Telegraph.

BEWARE OF FAKE CURES.

Take Paine's Celery Compound if You Need a True Remedy.

Do Not Allow a Salesman to Palm Off Any Substitute.

HEALTH IS TOO PRECIOUS TO LISTEN TO THE PREACHING OF QUACKS.

Paine's Celery Compound Makes the Sick Well Again.

The Wonderful Prescription that Results from the Life Work of America's Greatest Physician, Investigator and Practitioner.

There is one direction, as Dr. George F. Shrady, America's first surgeon, distinctly says, in which people seem to need enlightenment at present more than they have for many years past.

"This is the rational appreciation of the danger of quackery and fake cures."

Dr. Shrady's article in the New York World of Dec. 27th, should be read by every man and woman who is ever inclined to listen to the nonsensical, but too often plausible, ramblings of traders in patent medicines.

When Prof. Edward E. Phelps, M.D., LL.D., of Dartmouth college, after a long life of study in the most recent scientific investigation of disease, evolves the marvelous formula of Paine's celery compound—when after the closest possible observance by the best practitioners it is found that this greatest remedy of our generation not only does all, but even accomplishes more than the modest doctor—the giant among men that he has proved to be—more than he was willing at first to claim—when thousands of sufferers in every walk of life, sufferers from the ailments that come from overwork, deranged digestive organs, impaired nervous systems, too poor or too rich living, inattention to hygienic laws, have been absolutely restored to health by Paine's celery compound, after vainly trying every other possible remedy, and being dosed by well-meaning but incompetent so-called physicins.

When this is taken into consideration, and at the same time we find hosts of people still willing to be led astray by the hundred and one nostrums which irresponsible traders try to foist upon them on the pretext that these preparations are "as good as Paine's celery compound" [but really because they make a big profit on such preparations], it is time for every one who detests fraud, to warn his neighbors, and take the warning to himself, that when he goes to get a bottle of Paine's celery compound he must not be wheedled into taking some other remedy.

Paine's celery compound makes people well. These other things work harm.

Paine's celery compound is not a patent medicine. Its formula is given freely to every physician.

These trashy stuffs that you are asked to buy are made up of ingredients that should never be taken into a sick stomach.

These ordinary nervines, tonics and sarsaparillas are no more to be compared with Paine's celery compound than a glimmering candle is to be compared with the wonderful modern search light.

If a person needs a true nerve tonic, a real blood purifier, a reliable diuretic, that will restore strength, renew vitality, regulate the kidneys, liver and bowels, and make one well, let that person try his or her first bottle of Paine's celery compound and mark the wonderful result!

"TISS ME DOOD-NIGHT."

"Pease, mamma, pease, tiss me dood-night,"
My blue-eyed love, with sunny curls,
Stood pleading 'tween her sobs and tears,
I said, "I can't kiss naughty girls."

I led her to her snowy cot,
"Pease, mamma, pease," she sobbed again,
"I won't be naughty any more."
I left her, all her pleadings vain.

I had been reared in Spartan school,
And deemed it duty to control
With rigid rule, nor never knew
That love with love should sway the soul.

I heard her sob, my mother heart
With yearning filled, to soothe and cheer,
Yet I refrained, and in her sleep
My babe still lay sobbing there.

'Twas midnight when I felt a touch—
A fever'd hand lay on my brow,
My white-robed baby pleaded still,
"Pease, mamma, pease; I can't sleep now."

All through that agonizing night
Delirious she moaned in pain,
The little broken heart still begged
For kisses that I gave in vain.

At dawn the angels hovered near;
She nestled close, and smiled and said,
"I won't be naughty any more,"
And in my arms my babe lay—dead.

And I am old; the passing years
Have brought no comfort in their flight,
My heart still hears that sobbing cry,
"Pease, mamma, pease, tiss me dood-night."

THE PRINCE OF PEACE AT LOGO.

The day Logo was born there came with the rush and roar of the boom tide a Baptist missionary preacher ready to open a gospel tent.

A marked feature in the opening of nearly all the boom towns of Oklahoma was the presence of the missionaries of the Roman and Evangelical Protestant churches, contesting with the gamblers, dancehouse men and others of that ilk for land on which to erect buildings. At Guthrie the "Dodge City gang," which was aiming to establish quarters in various parts of the town, attempted to drive out of a choice corner a preacher of the Methodist persuasion who had got there first. The preacher was a fighting parson, but there is no doubt that he would have been either moved or removed but for the fact that a number of men who were not much on piety as their usual gait, came to the help of the Lord against the mighty. On a count of guns the Dodge City gang concluded it would be policy to withdraw. If they had reached a different conclusion the history of Guthrie would be bloodier than it is.

The Logo parson was called Brother John, and the strangest part of it was that no one knew him by any other name. Even the appearance of the name of John Wentworth at the bottom of his church notices appearing regularly every week in the Logo Bloomer could not rid the community of its fixed habit. Brother John he had been known from the beginning and Brother John he was and is to remain until the end, which, I hope, is yet far off.

Brother John was a man of good works. He was at constant war with the world, the flesh and the devil. He knew that the only way for him to reach the hearts of the men with whom he had to deal was to preach Christ and him crucified. For it is as true now as it was during all the long and dark night of the middle ages that the men of the most desperate valor—the most warlike instinct—the most bloody-minded men, if you will, are those whose eyes turn most longingly to Calvary; who adore most that sublime self-sacrifice, abnegation and humility of which they know themselves to be incapable; who aspire most to that meekness so foreign to their natures. The weak man sneers at the cross; the strong man never.

So when Brother John preached the cross in Logo he struck the popular chord. The people heard him gladly. Sometimes at night, when he heard the shots in the street, followed by the rush of feet and the excited exclamations, which told that some new tragedy had been added to the history of the town, he would rise from his bed and remain in prayer for hours, and often until, with the early dawn, someone would tap at his humble door to ask him to come around and officiate at the funeral.

As Christmas drew near a new inspiration and a new resolution came to Brother John. He had been talking in the abstract. He would be concrete. He had been telling these men of the Christ life and urging them to live as near to it as possible. But he had not been practical in his methods. He had set before them an example impossible of full and complete attainments, but he had neglected to provide means enabling them to attain to it, even in part, in any practical and comprehensive way. He would urge them to make a supreme effort. He would admonish them, as the birthday of Christ drew near, to make a sublime attempt to overcome the weaknesses of the flesh.

Brother John had a pretty good idea of what the old-fashioned Christmas season in Logo would be like. He knew these men, or their kind, of old. He knew that what are called the holidays in other parts of the world would be the busiest season of the year for the doctor and the undertaker at Logo. And his heart yearned to make a new dispensation and a new departure.

Christmas fell on a Sunday that year. So in the issue of the Logo Boomer the next but one preceding the day Brother John inserted this notice:

"At the First Baptist Church the pastor will preach from the text: "I am the way, the truth and the life,' being practical advice as to how the birthday of Christ should be spent. The pastor has a plan to propose for giving Logo a boom. Come one, come all.

"JOHN WENTWORTH."

"Topknot" Sawyer, the greatest boom editor the Southwest has ever seen or ever will see, gave this notice a prominent place at top of column and next to reading matter. That was the place he always assigned to anything, from any quarter, proposing a boom. But immediately following it was this from the Red Light:

"Three new dance girls from the Oriental of Perry. Special engagement for Christmas Day and all Christmas week. Hot drinks of all kinds. Everything hot, red hot.

"The '76 bars everything but fists; at the Oriental everything goes."

The heart of Brother John sank within him. How could he bring the spirit of Christ into any community so afflicted as this? If Christ was to be made manifest was not the devil equally manifest in this proclamation of the Red Light? But he was the stuff men are made of, and the more convinced he became that it was the devil himself who was challenging him to a struggle for the field, the more determined he grew to win the fight. "His saints in all this wicked world shall conquer ere they die," was the refrain that rang through his mind as he metaphorically buckled on his armor and went out to do battle in the name of the Lord of Hosts.

He would have a week's start. That was a great thing. The sermon he had prepared for the Sunday before Christmas would be at least four or five days ahead of the new dance girls and the hot drinks and all the other hot stuff promised by the Red Light. The seed he would sow would not fall upon stony ground. He would have the first deal in this game of cards with the Prince of Darkness, and Brother John flattered himself that he had not entirely lost the skill and dexterity in dealing which had characterized his play in the Gunnison country before he saw the error of his ways. He was not disappointed in the size of his audience. It was the largest ever assembled in the small frame building he had erected on the corner lot he had held at the muzzle of a Winchester for twenty-four hours after the opening. The building was not only filled to overflowing, but, it being a mild day, all the windows were filled with eager and expectant listeners.

The morning stages had brought visitors in from all the boom towns along the trail. They were there from Lido, Marlow and Reno, from Hennessey and Pond Creek; from every town which in that early day of Oklahoma history regarded Logo as a rival in the race to determine the location of the future metropolis.

"Come here to take notes on the boom sermon," whispered Thompson Travis to Otis Eldridge, pointing to Colonel Miles, of Lido and "Pony" Sanders of Reno, who had come early and taken front seats. "'Pears ter me 'taint jist the right sort o' play to advertise your boom pointers ten days ahead."

The reader of this narrative is already advised of what the "boom pointer" in the sermon was. Brother John, in his game with the devil, had played a card out of his sleeve in advertising a boom sermon. He played for a crowd, and he had won the first point in the game. And the crowd inspired him. He threw himself into his work with an eloquence, a force and a vigor, an earnestness, an appealing enthusiasm which moved his audience at his will. He dwelt upon his hopes and fears for the Christmastide. He told of how he dreaded most the flaming out of the men of wrath; how he feared strife, contention, murder and all uncharitableness, and how he had held the image of Christ before them, hoping that they would worship it not only in the spirit, but in the flesh.

"Oh, for a week of Christ-life in Logo," he cried, spreading his arms above his flock.

"Oh, for only a day of that life. We might stumble, we might fall, but if we rose again and pressed onward we would be doing his holy will. He who seeks shall surely find, though he may be long in the search. How many here want to be like Christ?"

Every hand in the audience went up.

"How many will try to be like him?"

Every hand went up again.

"Then every man here will sign this contract, to run for the rest of this year," said Brother John, as he took a paper out of his pocket and read:

"We, the undersigned, this 18th day of December, 1893, agree for the rest of this year—

"Not to drink.
"Not to fight.
"Not to kill.
"Not to rile anybody.
"Not to bear firearms.
"To be patient and meek.
"To bear insult and injury.
"To turn the other cheek if struck."

"I move to strike out the first clause in that contract," said Duplee Dodge.

"If that goes I fear all the rest will follow it," said Brother John, sorrowfully.

"Not necessary," said Duplee. "We've got rid of all the skunks around here, and the men of Logo are good for their word, drunk or sober."

So the pledge against drinking was stricken out. All the others stood, with the distinct understanding that every man living in Logo must sign the compact. When the paper had been circulated through the audience and was returned to Brother John he found that not a man in the town had been missed.

"Where does the boom come in on this thing?" asked Thompson Travis, somewhat uneasily.

"The boom will come," said the preacher, triumphantly surveying the list, "when we prove to the world that we are capable of doing this thing."

But while the preacher had been busy and so far successful his arch enemy the devil had not been idle. It was he who put it into the minds of the boomers from Lido, Reno and Marlow to appear at the meeting. And it was certainly his evil influence which suggested to them that the success of the scheme meant the success of Logo in the metropolitan race. His next suggestion, naturally, was the advisability of disseminating the information up and down the trail that Logo was going unarmed; that she had to the last man swore off from fighting for two weeks; that her fighting men had agreed to take insults and turn the other cheek when struck.

"We uns must stay together," said Colonel Miles at a whispered caucus of the visiting boomers held in the stage office. "But what the hell can we do to break it up? I know none o' my fellers will come here to raise a row when they hear this whole town's under a pledge not to fight."

"Git up your rapscallions," said "Pony" Sanders, meaning in the language of that country, the men who browbeat the inoffensive and defenseless, who take advantage of every opportunity to bluff and who are ambitious to cut a notch on their gun handles whenever the thing can be done without the least danger to themselves.

The devil first appeared to Logo in a cloud of dust at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the Tuesday following these events, which rose from the old Fort Supply trail going toward Lido. In the gray dust cloud there was an occasional red gleam and a loud report mingled with a yell which struck upon many an ear in Logo with a most familiar sound. Soon the horse and rider came into clearer view and then Thompson Travis pointed his finger down the trail and said:

"Thar comes Lum Padgett back agin."

"Damn me if 'tain't," growled Otis Eldridge. "What'll we do to him?"

"What kin we do? We're under oath, and that varmint knows it."

Logo shook with indignation at the return of Lum Padgett. Three months before he had been run out of town for quarrelsomeness, cowardice, bluffing, cheating and general cussedness and warned not to come back. Since then he had been driven out of a dozen towns, but had finally settled down in Lido on paroie—that is, with the understanding that in case of any misunderstanding he might get into he was to be presumed guilty until proven innocent.

Lum fired a half dozen shots as he reached the Red Light, where he threw his cayuse back on the haunches and took a look at the crowd, which by this time had assembled.

"Why, you coyotes," he yelled, rising in his stirrups. "Did sich rapscallions as you uns think you could skeer Lum Padgett? Why, don't you know me? I'm the cyclone of the plains, the blizzard of the north, the most cantankerousest, most contrariest, most independentest cuss you ever seen. I kin whup my weight in wild cats, fist fight or gun play, I don't keer which.

"Is they a man heer?" he asked, as he resumed his saddle, "as wants to take me up? I reckon not. You all know me, and you know I'm a man as won't be fooled with. The best men among you has licked my boots in fear and trembling'. Otis Eldridge is one of 'em; Thompson Travis is another; Syl Carney is another, and Dupe Dodge got down on his knees once and begged me not to kill 'im. They collogued together agin me at last an' drove me out o' here, but I've bin layin' off to come back, and here I am. Whoopee!"

And he fired another salute of six rounds. A council was immediately held by the four men who had been named by Padgett. They met in the upstairs room of "Old '76," the general headquarters of the vigilance committee. Every man was white to the lips.

"I guess we're in fer it," groaned Thompson Travis, "but we'll have to pull our freight. We can't stay in this country if we take it."

Just then Frank Pieper pushed his head up through the trapdoor and shouted:

"The Arkansaw trav'ler's comin' back!"

The council rushed to the windows opening to the street, and there saw that the crowd had left the Red Light and moved down the block to a point in front of Old '76, where a long-haired and lantern-jawed individual, astride of a spavined steed, was evidently haranguing them.

"I've come back to stay as long as I feel like it," floated up to the windows as the council opened. "I wuz druv out o' heer by a hundred men on one, an' they ain't none o' them men now as'll dare to face me in battle. I don't want to brag on myself, but where I'm the best known, in Arkansas, they trimble at my name. I've come back here for revenge, and I hereby give ten days' notice to Otis Eldridge, Frank Pieper, Ben Bruce, Syl Carney, Duplee Dodge and Thompson Travis to go armed, for at the end o' that time I'll begin to shoot. They're a lot o' ornery cowardly sneaks, an' I'll get even with 'em, if I have to camp on their trail till the judgment day."

The "Arkansaw traveler" had dismounted and was about to go into the "Old '76" for refreshments, when another volley was heard on the outskirts of town, and a moment later another horseman emerged from another cloud of dust, with a salvo of yells and artillery.

"Hairtrigger Brady," said Syl Carney, "I saved his life in Deadwood once when the crowd was going to hang him for shootin' a woman in a dancehouse. He's the ornriest, dirtiest cur this side o' hell."

"Gentlemen," said the stranger, as he stood up in his stirrups, "I'm glad to see this welcome to a perfect stranger in your midst. I was expectin' it, and it kinder overpowers me like. I've heern o' Logo ever sence this country opened, an' I've come to see fer myself what you've got here. They's only one trouble 'bout me, I'm too easy riled, and that's how I've come to be called 'Hairtrigger' Brady wherever I'm known. I've got too many notches on my stick, an' no man knows it beter'n I do, but I can't help it when I'm riled. So, gentlemen, don't rile me an' we'll get along all right together."

"D' you know the pledge this town's tuk?" asked Martin Davis.

"Oh, heavens," said Hairtrigger Brady, throwing up his hands. "You don't mean to tell me Logo's gone dry and quit drinkin'?"

"No," said Martin, "but every man in town's swore off fightin' an' rilin' one another."

"Jist the place I bin lookin' fer for yeers and yeers," said "Hairtrigger," as he dismounted. "God must 'a showed me the way heer, gentlemen. It's a place o' rest, sweet rest, fer a man of ungovernable temper, who can't sleep o' nights fer thinkin' o' the widows an' orphans an' broken-hearted mothers and sisters an' sweet hearts he's made in his anger."

About sundown of that day it was announced that the Holy Terror had come into town on the Reno coach. Thompson Travis, Blufe Reno, Allen Downs, Ben Bruce and Syl Carney were in the '76 when Otis Eldridge threw open the door and announced:

"Here comes the Holy Terror back agin."

The populace of Logo was by this time thoroughly alive to the situation and acted as a committee of escort for each distinguished arrival, who might be expected, under the new order of things, to visit humiliation and disgrace upon the well-known and recognized fighting men of the community. So as the Holy Terror turned into Main street the crowd came with him and it actually cheered as he mounted a dry goods box in front of the Red Light.

"Gentlemen," said the Holy Terror, "it fill' my heart with pride and joy to git sich a reception as this when I come back to Logo. I told them coyotes that tied me to the mule that night that I'd come back an' drink by myself an' none of 'em would dare say a word. I drinks by myself when I feels like it, and if any man here don't like it he knows what he kin do. You know me! I'm the Holy Terror. I ain't called the Holy Terror for nothing'. I've buried my dead in every State and territory west of the Mississippi river, and to-night the owl croaks above the grave of the last man that riled me.

"Now," he continued, after pausing a moment to note the effect of this deliverance on his audience, "I want this crowd to go with me to the '76 saloon. I will go inside an' call fer a drink by myself. That crowd of coyotes'll be there, an' if they've got the grit to back up what they said they'll kill me for comin' back here an' violatin' what they call the social code o' this town. I may have to die, but if I do, gentlemen, I'll die game and filled with bullet holes. If not, an' they take my dare, I'll whistle an' the crowd'll take drinks on me."

And that is how and why Otis Eldridge threw open the door of "Old '76," where the "coyotes" were assembled, with the announcement: "Here comes the Holy Terror back agin."

A moment later the Holy Terror came through the door, outside of which the crowd stood in silent expectancy. He gazed defiantly, noting particularly, as could be seen by the movement of his eyes, the fact that none of the group bore side arms. Then he struck a tragic air.

"Cowards," he hissed. "Even thus am I revenged. When you used the brute force of numbers to drive me from this town I said nothing, but resolved to return some day, at all hazards, and to do as I please. It may be a law in this town that no man shall drink by himself, but no law was ever made than can run me, an' that's why I'm called the Holy Terror."

Walking up to the bar, he called for glass and bottle, and when these were set out proceeded to fill the glass to the brim. It was the most direct and insulting challenge the committee had yet received and Thompson Travis, who was himself easily riled, was for a renunciation of all Christian life on the spot. He pointed toward the Holy Terror and urged that he be again deported.

"What yer promised to do if I come back," said the Terror, "was to kill me. I dare ye to do it. I'll fight any one o' you or all o' you together."

He drained his glass and whistled and instantly the crowd poured in. To be thus humiliated before the public eye was adding injury to insult, and the committee went upstairs, while the Holy Terror entertained the crowd. After this things went from bad to worse. The "rapscallions" continued to pour in. All the Falstaffs of the plains were inquiring the way to Logo. "Three-Ball Charlie," "Dead-Shot Dick," "The Alligator" and "The Fox" and a virtual reign of terror were all on hand before Christmas day came.

That day brought the climax. "Hairtrigger" Brady had slapped Thompson Travis on one cheek and demanded that he turn the other. It was just after the Christmas sermon, preached by Brother John, in which he had thanked God for a week which had tried so sorely, without weakening, the patience, the honor and faith of the men of Logo.

"The victory would be less," he said, "if it had been less dearly bought. Only through overcoming temptation can we be made free from sin. Brethren, again I adjure you, turn the other cheek."

"Turn the tother one this way," said Hairtrigger Brady in front of the Red Light, after he had left the marks of his fingers on the right cheek of Thompson Travis. "Practice what yer preacher preaches."

"I will," said Thompson, as he turned his left cheek to the bully and drew a bowie knife from the pocket of his Sunday coat. "Now strike it."

"That's agin yer pledge," said Hairtrigger, white as a sheet, as he pointed to the weapon.

"'Tain't firearms," was all the answer Travis made to the protest. "But why don't you hit tother cheek?"

"Yer might kill me," said Hairtrigger, "an' that'd shore be a breakin' o' your pledge. I won't tempt no man to go back on his vows."

"Much obleeged," growled Thompson as he moved away.

That incident aroused Hairtrigger Brady to the necessity of doing something desperate. His desperation took the shape of shooting a Sunday sojourner in the town, a St. Louis drummer, stopping at the Southwestern Hotel.

The vigilance committee ordered the city marshal to ring the fire bell for a public meeting. Thompson Travis was ordered to bring Brother John before the meeting, and when the preacher appeared one member of the vigilance committee after another demanded the abrogation of the compact.

"Even the city marshal," said Otis Eldridge, "is goin' around without a gun an' takin' insults from varmints. We wants a stop put to it."

"The town is swarmin' with rapscallions," said Duplee Dodge. "An' every man in this town is under bond not to hurt 'em."

"That's a mistake," said Brother John. "There's one man here didn't sign the pledge."

"Who is he?" asked a dozen voices.

"I'm the man," said the preacher. "None of you thought it necessary, and I had this very contingency in view when I kept my name off the list. I've brought along the guns I used to carry at Tombstone and in the Gunnison and now I'm going to drive the rapscallions out of town."

"We'll go with you," volunteered Syl Carney, Ben Bruce, Thompson Travis and a dozen others.

"No, no. You're all under pledge and I'm not. All of you stay where you are and see the procession go by."

Ten minutes later there came the noise of a series of shots to the crowd in waiting.

"He's found 'em," said Syl Carney.

"He's rounding 'em up for the trail," said Ben Bruce.

In another five minutes the Holy Terror came into view belaboring a mule, which was doing its very best under the pressure. Close behind were "Hairtrigger" Brady, "Dead-Shot Dick," "The Fox," "The Alligator," and, bringing up the rear, "Lum" Padgett, the cyclone of the plains and the blizzard of the north. Close behind this panting and terror stricken cavalcade came the parson, mounted on Mose Thompson's mule, and firing fresh volleys at every jump. He stopped in front of the meeting house and raised his hand for silence.

"Meeting to-night at early candle-light," he said.

"It was a powerful meetin'," Jed Withrow said, in describing it. Brother John poured out his soul. He told how the strong man lives in the fear of the Lord and by God's mercy. He described how "the coward and bad men" had fled at the first shot. And then he prayed, and the close of the invocation was: "On earth peace, good will toward men."

"Amen!" said a score of voices, and then the meeting broke up, with three cheers for the parson.

When in doubt, don't talk.

Grounding Fence Wires.

For some years past we have been urging farmers when they repair their fences each spring to ground the wires every twenty rods or such a matter, and thus avoid the danger of having the lightning, when a fence is struck, making the round of the field and killing any stock that may be near it. The subject was brought up at the late meeting of the mutual insurance companies and discussed somewhat fully, says Wallace's Farmer, and the almost universal experience was, that when wires had been grounded as above suggested, there had been little or no damage to stock. This is a matter of great importance, as will readily be seen by any man who examines his assessment and discovers that a large per cent. of the losses are those of cattle by lightning and in open fields. We do not claim that grounding the fence wires will avoid the danger altogether. What we claim is that the fence where the wires are grounded are much safer than the cattle in the open field, for the reason that a properly grounded fence acts as a lightning rod to the parts of the field adjacent to the fence.

The Chicken Mite.

This pest of poultry is a small tick of a white or grayish color when unfed, but of a red color when filled with a chicken's blood. They have eight legs in later stages, but when quite young have but six. The mouth parts, illustrated in Fig. c, are capable of extension so as to penetrate the skin of the fowl. The mites remain on the chickens only while feeding, and are to be found in great numbers secreted in the cracks and corners of the poultry house or adjacent places. On this account measures for their suppression must be directed toward freeing the fowls from them and killing all that are harbored in the building or preventing their attacks on the fowl. The attacks on the poultry are made more particularly at night, although some mites may be found on the fowls at almost any time. To get rid of them spray the inside of the chicken house with kerosene or kerosene emulsion, taking special pains to remove all mites from the cracks or rough spots on the roosts and then to daub the ends of the roosts with soft tar so that the mites in attemping to reach the fowls must perish in the tar. —Bulletin No. 33, Exp. Two Acres Enough.

TROUBLESOME POULTRY PEST.

What many an American farmer fails to do on 100 acres, the thrifty Hollander in Belgum easily does on two acres; namely, support a large family and lay by something for a rainy day. He does it by making the most of every inch, by heavy manuring, allowing no waste places. His two acres is surrounded by a ditch of running water. The typical two-acre Belgium farm will contain a patch of wheat or rye and another of barley; another fair portion grows potatoes. A row of cabbage grows all around on the sloping sides of the ditches with a row of onions just inside, leaving bare walking room between them and the grain.

The shade trees round the house are pear trees. Every foot of land is made to produce. He keeps pigs and chickens. We refer to this as illustrating the possibilities of land production. In Belgium 6,000,000 people, chiefly farmers, live on a piece of land the size of the State of Maryland. They furnish an object lesson on successful intensive farming.—Grape Belt.

Hitching Device.

When one leads a horse to water, the horse must usually be tied while the water is pumped. A device to save the bother of hitching and unhitching is shown herewith. A light post with a slit in the top, as shown in the sketch, is driven into the ground. The knotted end of the halter is simply laid in the slit, and the horse is secure. The same kind of a hitching device is often of service in other positions.

The Dairy Habit.

Habit has much to do with the profitableness or failure of a cow. Therefore, I want a cow, or a heifer, rather, to form good habits early in life. It is to form the habit of giving milk for a long time that we milk our heifers for this length of time between their first and second calves. Not only does she form the habit of a persistent milker, but she will nearly always make a larger milker, and give a full flow of milk up to nearer calving time. In fact, we find that heifers handled in this manner are always hard to dry off, nearly always developing into continuous milkers.—Maine Farmer.

A Homemade Beef Hoister.

The hoister shown below is suitable for use with beef or hogs. Two 4 by 4 inch timbers, 14 feet long, and fastened together near the top, are set firmly in the ground. Eight feet from these place another pair like the first. In the forks thus formed place a strong piece to the middle of which attach a pulley. Between the supports and a little to one side set a stout stake and to its top attach another pulley. Then with an ordinary windlass and a rope passed through both pulleys and tied to the gambrel, the heaviest beef or hog can be readily suspended.—Farm and Home.

HOISTING CARCASSES MADE EASY.

Rabbits and Trees.

The simplest and cheapest protection is coating bark with some substance offensive to these animals. Among them is a thick wash made of cow manure with water, with enough water slaked lime to render the mixture of a dull, white appearance, or rather of a greenish-gray. Rabbits do not like this kind of condiment with their food. A stronger mixture is made by mixing gas tar, but for young trees with tender bark, it should be cautiously or sparingly used, or it may injure them. The mixture is applied with any old broom or coarse brush. A moderate portion of asafoetida in the mixture is said to give it additional efficiency as a rabbit repeller.

Common Sense Farming.

Farming if not practical is nothing. Theory may do as a working model, but as it cannot take into consideration all the elements nor all the unforeseen circumstances and exceptions, it is often of little value because it cannot be applied. Under such circumstances a good application of common sense will prove of more value to the farm than an application of the best barnyard manure, or of the more expensive use of the best fertilizers in the market. A constant application of good common sense by the farmer himself will almost certainly keep any farm in good running order.—Farm News.

Odds and Ends.

When finger nails are dry and break easily, rub vaseline on them at night and after washing the hands with soap or ammonia.

If pie crust is desired to be brown when baked it should be brushed over with sweet milk just as the pie is put into the oven for baking.

When baking apples replace the cores with sugar and a pinch of cinnamon, put a small bit of butter on each and sprinkle with sugar. Cover for a short time after putting them in the oven, and when they get tender remove the cover and let them brown.

The most trying time for a sick person is between the hours of 1 and 4 in the morning. Vitality becomes diminished, and the strength should therefore be fortified as far as possible with some strong food, either soup or eggs or milk, about midnight. The nurse should always make the meals look as tempting as possible.

Bee Notes.

Aristotle numbered bees among civil people.

The early writers believed that bees could hear.

A temperature of from 70 to 80 degrees Fahrenheit is more favorable to keeping honey liquid than a lower temperature.

Pliny said for the uses of life bees labor, work, ordain a commonwealth, have their private councils, their public warlike actions, and have morality.

About one-half of the wild bees, according to Prof. Braner, have drones with stings, and some of the wild bees are only one thirty-third of an inch in length.

The average weight of a prime swarm of bees is six pounds, the heaviest being eight pounds, and the lightest five and one-half pounds. Second swarms average three pounds.

The time that a colony will be actually out of a laying queen, from the date of dequeening to the laying of a new one reared by the bees alone, will be from about twenty to thirty days.—Southern Farmer.

COMFORTABLE INN.

Funny Adventure o a Hurried Traveler in Australia.

The author of "Old Melbourne Memories" gives an adventure belonging to one of his Australian riding-tours, which might have served as the plot of "She Stoops to Conquer." He was in a region with which he had previously been familiar. A public house at which he had often stopped was near, and he went there to breakfast, preparatory to riding to Heidelberg, fifty-seven miles all told, that night.

Dismounting at the stable door, he says, I gave my mare to the groom, with a brisk injunction as to a good feed, and passed into the house. In the parlor was a maid servant laying the breakfast. I stood before the fire in an easy attitude, and demanded to know when breakfast would be ready.

"In about half an hour, sir."

I noticed in her a slightly surprised air.

"Can't you get it a little sooner, Mary?" I said, guessing at her name with the affability of a tavern guest of fashion and substance.

"I don't know, sir," she made answer, meekly.

"Come, Mary," I said, "surely you could manage something in less time? I have a long way to ride to-day."

She smiled, and was about to reply when a door opened, and a middle-aged personage, with full military whiskers and an air of authority, looked in.

"I don't think I have the pleasure of knowing you, sir," he began, with a certain dignity.

"No," I said, "no, I think not. Not been here since last year."

I was cool and cheerful, and it struck me that for an inukeeper he was overpunctilious.

"This is no inn, sir," he said, with increased sternness.

In a moment my position flashed upon me. I then remembered that I had not noticed the sign when I drove up. The house and grounds, large and extensive, had been occupied by a private family. Nothing very uncommon about that! So here I had been ordering my horse to be fed, and lecturing the parlor maid, all the while in a strange gentleman's abode.

I could not help laughing, but immediately proceeded to apologize fully and formally, at the same time pointing out that the place had been an inn when I last saw it. Hence my mistake, which I sincerely regretted. I bowed, and made for the door.

My host's visage relaxed.

"Come," he said, "I see how it all happened; but you must not lose your breakfast for all that. My wife will be ready directly, and my daughter."

"All's well that ends well." I was introduced to the ladies of the house, who made themselves agreeable. There was a good laugh over my invasion of the parlor and Mary's astonishment. I breakfasted with appetite. We parted cordially; and as my mare carried me to Heidelberg that night without a sign of distress, she also had probably breakfasted well.

Decline of the Horse.

The statistics of the United States department of agriculture show a decided falling off in the number and also the value of horses in this and other countries as compared with the reports of a year ago. In this country alone there is a decline in the number of horses 769,261, or 4.8 per cent., as compared with last year, while the decline in value was $76,590,394, or 13.3 per cent. The fall in value appears to be universal, and the decline in New York, New Jersey and Pennsylvania is explained to be largely due to the introduction of electric and cable cars, and also the increased use of bicycles, which have reduced the urban demand for horses, and consequently their number and price. But the chief reasons adduced for the fall in value of horses on farms and ranches, which is quite marked, is the financial and industrial depression, and the cost of feed consequent on protracted and repeated drouths. Sales of horses at $2 per head and below are reported from Kansas, Nebraska, Utah and Oregon. Old and inferior stock has been largely killed off in the central regions and in California for fertilizer, etc.

The Uses of Responsibility.

Every mother should remember that the making of her daughter is of far greater importance than the administration of things in her house, and every daughter should realize that she can learn to avoid mistakes only when she sees them. She enjoys most seeing her mother's mistakes and resolving that when she has a house she will "never do so." A beginning may be made with a small and comparatively unimportant responsibility, and it is to be remembered that responsibility, and not mere work, is the great thing. The very little girl may have the care of one plant, a hardy one to begin with, but system and neatness may be practiced in its care to great advantage. If the plant should be a blooming one a small vase for the breakfast table would give an additional bit of care and pleasure to both child and parents. Regularity, thoroughness, quietness in labor may be practiced under a wise mother's influence till they become a part of her daughter's character.—Ladies' Home Journal.

THE CHANCES IN THE HORSE MARKET.

The report of the State Agricultural Society has an encouraging word for the horse breeding interest and useful hints as to directions in which efforts should be made.

THE DECLINE.

During the past three years the downward tendency in horse values has kept pace with the decline in price of other agricultural products, which fact naturally brought about a most noticeable decrease in their production. In periods of financial depression the horse interest is one of the first to feel the hand of economy by way of cessation of enterprises and their use as a luxury. Then, again, the discharge, during recent years, of thousands from service on street railroads where electricity and steam (cable system) have supplanted them, resulting in throwing upon the market a promiscuous lot that were purchased at low prices, and adapted for use in place of the appropriately bred animal had great effect upon values, as market changes in prices of any product regulate its production.

THE EFFECTS.

These facts have very materially affected the breeding of types for which there is, and always has been, a limited demand, viz., heavy drafts from 1300 to 1600 pounds in weight, the toppy carriage horse of proper size, color, action and quality, and the cavalry horse for army uses. The United States Government has in the past been a heavy purchaser of California-bred horses of from 1000 to 1200 pounds weight, of uniform quality. But prices have been so low that the breeder of these classes could not meet the competition hereinbefore mentioned, and as a consequence either reduced or ceased breeding.

From statistics gathered by this office there is shown to be a 10 per cent reduction in the number of horses in this State as compared with the returns of one year ago, while there is a perceptible increase in values. The averages show as follows: Under one year old, $9 per head; under two years and over one year, $15; under three years and over two years $25, and over three years old, $35, as against $7, $10, $14 and $25, respectively, during the year 1895.

THE FUTURE.

We are of the opinion that a more opportune time to commence the systematic breeding of horses never existed—not, however, on the haphazard idea that anything, so long as it is a horse, will do, but by the selection of blood lines that will give uniform merit. The farming community of this State can profit by taking advantage of the present conditions, and prepare for recovery of values that, in our belief, will come, and be national in character.

California is better provided to advance the breeding of high-class carriage horses than many other States, by reason of her trotting-bred stock that we have been years in perfecting. This class of stock, crossed on the coach or hackney blood, will produce a superior carriage animal, which is considered the best selling horse the farmer can raise, as this class can be applied to more general work than any other type, and their lofty, high-bred appearance greatly assists in their sale. But no rough-coated, half-breed mares should be thus bred; use nothing but trotting-bred, well-formed mares for this purpose. All other classes of farm mares should be crossed with the best draft horses for the production of the heavy truck and delivery wagon animal, for which there is always a steady demand. The only way to insure recovery of values is to improve the breed of the general utility animal, and furnish what the trade requires.—Rural Press.

The advisors selected by President McKinley are as follows:

Secretary of State—John Sherman of Ohio.

Secretary of the Treasury—Lyman J. Gage of Illinois.

Secretary of War—Russell A. Alger of Michigan.

Secretary of the Navy—John D. Long of Massachusetts.

Secretary of the Interior—Cornelius N. Bliss of New York.

Secretary of Agriculture—James Wilson of Iowa.

Postmaster General—James A. Gary of Maryland.

Attorney-General—Joseph McKenna of California.

There is no change in the Crete affair. The Greeks have not retired from the island and apparently do not intend to do so unless they are driven away. The commands of both England and Russia have been disregarded, and it remains to be seen if these powers will resort to force. In the meantime, Turkey is massing her forces with the purpose of driving out the Greeks and overwhelming the island rebels, and the European powers are undoubtedly helping her in a secret way.

The Commission appointed to determine the location of the government harbor on the southern California coast have settled upon San Pedro. This is a defeat to the Southern Pacific Railroad people who have urged the claims of Santa Monica. There is no appeal from the findings of the commission. The amount available for harbor improvement at San Pedro is $2,500,000, and the work will not be long delayed.

On Friday last the House of Representives voted, 279 to 3, to authorize an international monetary conference.

MARRIED.

MERONEY—HANBY—At Los Angeles, March 7, 1897, by Rev. Coulter, J. E. Meroney of Bishop, and Miss Lillie M. Hanby of Los Angeles

T. C. Boland came up from Keeler last Saturday returning Sunday.

R. S. Miner, Esq., returned from a short visit to Bishop on Monday last.

A new residence has lately been built by Mr. George Place at the Reward mill.

As far as we can learn there has been no betting on the big fight in Independence.

Mrs. A. V. Davidson, who has been quite ill for some time past, is slowly improving.

Mrs. Eva. L. Gunn and daughter Helen came in from the Minnietta mine on Wednesday last.

Thomas Randall, the steam doctor, favored this district with a visit during the week.

J. W. Murphy and Treasurer Bunney left last Sunday for the Panamint section of country.

Quite a number of the population of this section are suffering from severe colds and la grippe.

Arthur Smith arrived from the Modock country on Wednesday. He is suffering from an injured foot.

Mrs. Henry Ward Beecher, widow of the famous preacher and author, died last Monday at Stamford Conn., aged 85 years.

Scott Broler arrived from Fish Springs on Sunday last. He reports the mines producing their quota of the precious metal.

Fritz Myer, T. E. Jones and E. Varney, were down from Round Valley on Saturday last on business in the Land Office.

Joe Buckwalter came in from Beveridge last week for supplies. He reports the mining outlook as flattering for that section of country.

Mr. Rimele representing Waterhouse & Lester, and Mr. Greenwood, traveling salesman for A. Schiling & Co., were in Independence on Tuesday last.

Henry Levy, J. C. Irwin, J. C. Miller, and J. J. Gunn will leave by tomorrow morning's train for Carson, where they will attend the big fight between Fitzsimmons and Corbett.

W. J. Ryan, the mining expert, left for Saline valley last Monday, where he has several men employed developing the copper property which he lately bonded from Eairs & Welsh.

Register Mulholland was taken seriously ill last Friday and on Saturday morning, accompanied by his wife, left for San Francisco, where he will undergo an operation for appendicitis.

Asa Hall, who has been employed at the Reward mill for the past eighteen months, will leave in a few days for Randsburg where he has been tendered a position in one of the mills of that flourishing district.

On Sunday, March 14th, religious services will be held as follows: Aberdeen at 11 o'clock a. m.; Liberty in the afternoon at 3 o'clock; Independence in the evening at 7 o'clock. All are cordially invited.

THOS. H. NICHOLAS, Pastor.

The price of silver is falling again towards its lowest record. Last Saturday in New York it was down to 63 7-8 cents per ounce, whilst on the same day in London it declined from 29¾ pence to 29 5-16 pence per ounce. These are the lowest prices for silver in two years.

County Clerk Hession returned on Friday evening last after a month's visit with relatives and friends on the other side of the mountains. Mr. Hession is much improved in health by his late trip but is pleased to get back to Inyo where old Sol can be seen for six days at least out of every week.

Articles of incorporation of the South Park Development Company have been placed on record in the Recorder's office. The above corporation has purchased nineteen mining claims in Pleasant Canyon, Panamint Mining District, this county, and known as follows: Ino, Jim Davis, Hill Top, Alta, Comstock, Gold Star, World Beater, Big Bill, Elephant, Florence, Gem, General Lee, Gold Note, Golden Terry, Little Till, Lookout, Mammoth and Summit. The company has a paid up capital of $10,000,000 divided into 100,000 shares of $100 each. The whole of this capital has been subscribed by the following persons: George Montgomery, J. E. Langford, George R. Wells, Charles H. Fish and C. B. Fleming, who will act as directors, and John M. Cannon, Hugh J. Cannon and E. A. Montgomery are the remaining shareholders. The head office of the company is in San Francisco, George R. Wells is President and A. W. Havens, Secretary.

Reward Mine.

At present the Reward Mining Company employ about twenty-five men in mine and mill. The ore already in sight, is enough to run the mill two years at least, working twenty-four tons per day. Although the ore is low grade, the cheapness of its transportation from mine to mill by tramway, and there being sufficient water power available to run the mill make it not only possible but profitable to work. The ore body will average seven feet in width, and is in a lime formation, all of which will be taken out and worked. The output of this mine is between $4,000 and $5,000 per month from the 10 stamp mill. The mill is supplied with two Frue concentrators, which save about 500 pounds of sulphurets per day, or about 15 tons per month. The concentrates are shipped to San Francisco for treatment, and return considerably over $100 per ton above freight and working charges.

Quite a village has already been built, sixteen buildings are up and more will soon be added.

The men employed have only words of praise for the management and managers of this property. Mr. Ben. Hoskins, the Superintendent, and Mr. Robt. Hoskins, Foreman, do all that lies in their power to make it safe and comfortable for the employes.

The table is supplied with the best the market affords, and we venture to add that no hotel in Inyo county can boast of a more sumptuous spread as regards quantity and quality.

It is a noticeable fact that no petty jealousies or hard feelings exist between the men. All seem to be kind and considerate to their fellow beings and get along harmoniously together. On Sundays the men leave work at 4:30, all take a bath, shave and change their apparel.

The success already achieved by this mine, under the able supervision of Supt. Hoskins, should act as an incentive to other mining companies to come forward and invest in the dormant mineral wealth of this immediate locality. There are several properties on the Eastside which we feel confident, with similar management, could soon be put on a dividend paying basis.

Water power can be obtained at a reasonable outlay and this in conjunction with the economical transportation of ore by tramway will yet be the means of many of our idle mines becoming once again producers.

From Aberdeen.

Mr. Montague and son are engaged in grubbing willows for A. L. Conklin.

Mrs. G. D. Calvert has been visiting friends in Independence.

The Inaugural Ball at Blackrock was attended by the elite of Blackrock society, and was a thoroughly enjoyable occasion, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. To the enchanting and merry strains of the violin, the light-hearted dancers "chased the glowing hours with flying feet," till twelve o'clock, when a sumptuous repast was partaken of. Dancing was resumed after supper and continued till the gray dawn of morning warned the merry-makers that the hour of revelry was past. Although the costumes worn by the ladies probably were not so gorgeous or expensive as those that graced the ballroom in Washington, they were becoming to the wearers and appropriate to the occasion, and their beauties were fully appreciated by the gentlemen present. As this was the first inaugural ball ever given in Blackrock, it undoubtedly will long remain a happy memory to those who were so fortunate as to be present.

AURORA.

Mining Excitement at Yuma.

Great excitement exists at Yuma occasioned by fabulous strikes of gold bearing ore in the mountains, seventy-five miles northeast of that place. None of the ore brought in from the rich strikes, runs less than $2 000. to the ton, and some runs a great deal higher. A store has been opened on the spot, and a stage line established at Sentieel, a point on the railway nearest the scene of operations.

The efforts of the discoverers to keep the location secret were frustrated by a prospector named Kane. He was at Gila City when the discoverer Edward Eichelberg returned fron Yuma with mining expert Frank Guerra. He started on their trail mouted on a burro and with no food but a box of sardines and a can of corned beef, but he followed their wagon tracks forty miles through the hills arriving in the middle of the night footsore and hungry. The following morning Kane discovered and located some claims which prospect well up into the thousands. Then he prepared to return only to find that his burro had deserted. He was compelled to return on foot and was for two days without food.

Dangers of the Grip.

The greatest danger from La Grippe is of its resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough remedy taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of this dread disease. It well effect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

The spiritual welfare of the men at the Reward mine is not neglected as Mr. Harvey Edgington, the popular engineer for the company, attends to that. On Sunday evenings, after the men have donned their Sunday clothes, they congregate in the reading-room of the lodging house and listen to Mr. Edgington read a chapter from the Good Book, Mr. Sullivan leads the prayers and Mr. Harris the choir in sacred music.

President McKinley has issued a call for an extra session of Congress to meet next Monday, March 15.

E. B. Jackson to Nancy L. Dorrance—Interest in Ford & Rawson ditch—$100.

Mrs. W. M. Richards to Wm. Arcularius—Lot in town of Keeler—$1.

May Extend the Line.

D. O. Mills and H. M. Yerington went south Thursday morning in their private car, and it is rumored that the C. & C road may possibly be extended to Randsburg after their return. The road now runs to Keeler, and from there it is but 90 miles to Kramer, a point on the Atlantic and Pacific road that is only 28 miles from Randsburg. Should Randsburg prove to be a permanent camp, and the road be opened to that point much traffic would go this way.—Dayton Times.

From Cripple Creek.

After the big fire in Cripple Creek I took a severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. HENDERSON, editor Daily Advertiser. For sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited, BADLY HIPPED.

It is hardly a compliment to say that anyone is "hipped," but anyone is pretty badly hipped who suffers with sciatica. It is in the hip that the excruciating pain takes hold and tortures. It is just there where St. Jacobs Oil, with its soothing penetration, has done some of its most remarkable work of cure. Those who suffer thus, therefore, need not despair of cure when this great remedy for pain can be had so readily, and as it is known as a sure cure, be sure to get it and insure speedy and perfect riddance of the intense misery. There are cases of confirmed crippling from this malady which this great remedy has effectually cured and restored the sufferer to a sound condition.

Unless he should change his mind in the meantime President-elect McKinley will call an extra session of Congress for Monday, March 15. This information was given to Congressman-elect Sturdevant by McKinley in Canton a few days ago.

TO GET OUT OF THE WAY

When trouble is coming, is obviously the part of common sense. An obstruction of the bowels is a serious obstacle to health. To get this out of the way is an easy matter with the thorough laxative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which, although it affords relief, never gripes and convulses like a drastic purgative. Dyspepsia, malarial, kidney and rheumatic ailments and nervousness yield to this genial family medicine.

"Gentlemen," said the orator, "this crisis will soon be at an end." "Thank heaven," murmured an auditor, "he's going to stop talking."

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters act as a mild cathartic, removing all undigested and refuse matter from the stomach and bowels, and cures constipation.

Malaria and Grip positively cured also all other Medical and Surgical cases guaranteed a cure or no charge. Reasonable terms; call or write; confidential. DR. CRAIG & CO., Medical Institute, 1536 Market St., San Francisco, Cal.

Beware Of Mercury!

Mr. Henry Roth, of 1848 South 9th Street, St. Louis, was given the usual mercurial treatment for contagious blood poison. He was twice pronounced cured, but the disease returned each time, he was seized with rheumatic pains, and red lumps and sores covered his body. "I was in a horrible fix" he says, "and the more treatment I received, the worse I seemed to get. A New York specialist said he could cure me, but his treatment did me no good whatever. I was stiff and full of pains, my left arm was useless so that I was unable to do even the lightest work. This was my condition when I began to take S. S. S., and a few bottles convinced me that I was being benefitted. I continued the medicine, and one dozen bottles cured me sound and well. My system was under the effects of mercury, and I would soon have been a complete wreck but for S. S. S."

S. S. S., (guaranteed purely vegetable) is the only cure for real blood diseases. The mercurial treatment of the doctors always does more harm than good. Beware of mercury!

THE FAMILY STORY

HIS REVENGE.

H. M. S. RAVAGER had met with an accident. Steaming up channel during the night she had collided with a bark out from —; and, though no one could quite tell how the mishap occurred, it was perfectly clear that the bark had gone down, and that the ram of the warship was in a damaged condition. H. M. S. Ravager was accordingly put into dry dock for repairs.

As very often happens at this place where the vessel was docked, convicts were at work upon the quays. They were a mixed lot; but, being good-conduct men, they all enjoyed a greater freedom of action in the discharge of their duties than is ordinarily extended to the enforced working guests of the nation. Yet, notwithstanding this unspoken testimony to their comparative worth, the commander of the Ravager was less disposed than usual to place trust in them. He was in a ferocious humor, for that little affair with the bark was not unlikely to interfere with his promotion. There would be an inquiry, of course, and what Christian ever could tell what confounded foolishness and injustice the "finding" might yield? He cursed the bark, and the ill-luck and the navigating lieutenant whom at one time he had left on the bridge, each with impartial fury; and put a double guard of marines ashore, with fixed bayonets and ball cartridge, and an emphatic instruction to "play the very devil with those jailbirds if they tried on any of their cursed nonsense."

The extra precaution was scarcely necessary. To do justice to these unwilling residents within the shadow of the broad arrow, they had no evil designs upon her Majesty's warship. Their hostility to an unappreciative country did not rise to quite so great a height as that. All the same, the commander might very easily have justified his course of action (had such been necessary) by the fact that many of the convicts were working only a few yards from the dock side and somewhat removed from the warder's immediate watchfulness; though it would have been possible to show on the other hand that, being men whose term of servitude was almost completed, these prisoners were perfectly reliable, inasmuch as they could not afford to commit any indiscretions calculated to jeopardize their expected early release on ticket-of-leave.

These considerations did not in any way concern the commander of H. M. S. Ravager, however. He was merely resolved to blow the convicts to the mischief, individually or collectively, if they tried on any tricks with his ship; and in the choicest of quarter-deck English gave orders accordingly.

One of the prisoners was working quite near to the dockside and almost in the track of one of the sentries from the Ravager. Though rather a refined person in appearance, the degradation of his position by no means overwhelmed him with melancholy or distress. It may have been the consciousness of innocence that enabled him to whistle softly an air which had served the street organs some seven years before and enabled him to view with unconcern the close proximity of his fellow-man. Perhaps he reflected that those aboard the Ravager were harder worked prisoners than himself and that he could afford them a trifle of pity.

He did not disdain, moreover, to take advantage of the situation in which he found himself; nor was his sensitiveness hurt by the silence of Tommy Atkins when he endeavored to engage that worthy in conversation. He was not discouraged by Tommy's dignity, and did not hesitate to try again when guard was changed late in the afternoon and Private Robert Smith commenced his monotonous sentry-go.

As it happened Private Smith was intensely interested and excited by the presence of the convicts. He had good reason to be, for he remembered with a vividness and horror that set him shuddering how near he had been some eight years before to just such a degradation as these men were enduring. He was a different personage altogether now—different even in name—to the slip of a boy who had thought it a distinction to be the boon companion of so clever and so dashing a man as Louis Vaudois. The service had made a man of him, had effected a complete change in his personal appearance; while the narrow escape from the conviction for forgery during the period of Vaudois' influence had so frightened him from wild ways that there was now no steadier member of her Majesty's red marines than Private Smith, sometime Roger Vanbrugh. But in one respect he did not alter. He remained staunch to a savage hatred against the man who had certainly brought ruin into his life, and by scoundrelly insinuating manners and methods had almost sent him into surroundings like unto those upon which he had gazed with such fascination ever since the Ravager had been floated into dock. It is true the charge against him at the Old Bailey had not been sustained through a defending counsel's clever manipulation of evidence imperfectly presented by the prosecution; but he hated Louis Vaudois no less passionately on that account, for he had but to recall those terrible hours spent before his judges—the miserable twistings, tellings, and haltings of the evidence, and, above all, the justness of the charge, to fill his heart with such fierce enmity as even now set his pulses leaping and boiling with the wildest desire for revenge.

A thrill of excitement went shivering down his spine for an instant traveled icily through his veins as he found himself ashore and pacing so closely to the convict who had made vain overtures to Private Atkins, and who was now softly humming a once favorite music hall ditty.

The man's back was turned toward Private Smith. To all appearances he was wholly engrossed by his work. And the soldier, though fascinated for a time, was gradually becoming accustomed to the other's presence when, as he passed the man for the twentieth time, a few words falling from the convict in a whispered undertone caused his heart to give one great startled bound and set all his nerves in a more painful quiver than ever.

"Say, old chap——"

But Private Smith passed on mechanically, after faltering a moment under the shock. Every sense was on the alert with excitement as he turned and came back toward the convict, his heart beating so fast that he felt near to suffocation. He was waiting with every sense in his body listening for the man to speak again.

"A bit of tobacco, old chap, will you?"

Again Private Smith passed on. This commonplace request almost caused him to burst out into a loud hysterical laugh. It was so foolish to get into such a state of serious excitement over the presence of a ruffian whose only desire was a "bit of tobacco." And he continued upon his march with a steadier and more confident tread.

But when, after again pacing forward, he once more came back towards his sentry-box, his mood was changed. A cloud was upon his face, and his brows were knit in a vain endeavor to recall some memory from the locked-up places within his mind. A repetition of the request had fallen upon his ears; but the ring of the man's voice was louder than it had been, and stirred Private Smith strangely. He stood in his box gazing upon the stooping convict and striving to remember where he had heard such a voice before. But he ransacked his mind in vain; at last dismissing his effort to remember with a rueful reflection that perchance the fellow was some old college chum who had fallen upon evil days, or may be some old comrade in arms who had come to grief. He inclined most to the latter impression, and, himself knowing well the luxury of tobacco and the wretchedness of a solitary man without it, his sympathies went keenly out to the "poor devil" who, but for the interposition of a merciful Providence, might easily have been a felon-comrade with himself. Though well knowing also that he was running considerable risk by giving the precious weed to the convict, he resolved to give him just a little for the old acquaintance sake which the man's voice vaguely suggested.

It happened that he had in his pocket a cake of tobacco purchased for a trifle when the Ravager was on the West Indian station. This he cut in two pieces, observing as he did so that the convict was watching him furtively. When he resumed his limited parade he held one of these pieces in his left hand and, swerving so as to pass nearer to the man, he loosened his hold of it and it fell at the convict's feet.

The man clutched at it with almost savage swiftness, and Private Smith kept upon his way, congratulating himself on having done a kindly thing and on escaping detection.

But the sight of the tobacco and the odor of it excited with the convict a furious covetousness. He had seen Private Smith return the second piece to his pocket, and he desired it with all the greed that was in his nature. That second piece he would have.

Private Smith was expecting a muttered word of thanks; but that was not what came when he once more strode past the recipient of his precious gift. The convict shifted his position, ever so slightly, yet sufficient to enable him to glance over his shoulder with an ugly scowl at the approaching soldier.

"That other piece," he demanded, fiercely, "or I'll split on you, by heaven!"

Private Smith saw his face clearly for the first time; and at the sight his heart stood still for an instant and then commenced beating at a madly furious and painful speed. A flash of intensest hatred ran through his blood, for there was no longer any mystery about the man's identity; and as he moved out of hearing of that now well-remembered voice he cursed himself with the most savage fury for the folly which had once more placed him in the power of Louis Vaudois.

His first belief was that, having recognized him, Louis Vaudois had done this thing with the mere desire to bring misfortune down upon him. When, however, he presently recalled how altered in personal appearance he had become since that day when last he had seen Louis Vaudois, this fear cleared away, leaving only black hate within his soul. So, he decided, the giving of the second piece would satisfy his once friend and enemy. He had nothing to fear or to lose beyond that. But he was reluctant to do this; it maddened him to think Vaudois, under even such conditions, was able to overreach and compel him to an act he would of his own will leave undone.

And yet there was apparently no other course before him than to accede to the ruffian's demands. He had arrived at this conclusion, and with a savage reluctance was preparing to submit to the inevitable when a thought flashed through his mind and set his pulses leaping with a sudden hope of retaliation. Would Louis Vaudois be fool enough to fall into the trap? That was the only question.

Swiftly he made his preparations, and then strode firmly—yet with pulses beating with an excitement stronger than before—once again toward the convict. As he advanced Vaudois' face was turned toward him with a ferociously threatening expression.

"Box—great coat—get the lot—smart!" Private Smith jerked out hoarsely as he passed.

He marched to the end of his parade, and there stood with his body only half-turned toward the sentry box. But out of the tail of his eye he saw Vaudois creep stealthily in the other direction. Almost shivering in his excitement and eagerness, he watched his enemy slip into the box and, emerging therefrom a moment later, with a swift movement make for the place where he had been working.

Now was the time for Private Smith to act. Turning to resume his march, he made pretense of observing Vaudois' doings for the first time, and with a roar of rage called upon the convict to halt. He covered the man with his rifle.

"Halt, there!" he shouted. "Hands up, or I'll fire."

And Vaudois, speechless with amazement and white with apprehension, obeyed.

The commotion that ensued was astonishing. A warder came rushing forward, and a number of blue jackets and marines hurried from the Ravager. In an instant the warder had Vaudois handcuffed, and then demanded an explanation. Private Smith lowered his rifle and went forward to where the others were standing.

"Well, what's the matter?" demanded the warder, sharply.

"I saw that fellow coming out of my box, that's all," Private Smith answered. "My greatcoat is there."

"And in the pockets——?"

"Two pieces of tobacco and a half crown."

Vaudois, after darting a glance of fierce rage upon the soldier, with imprecations upon his tongue, was taken, struggling, to the guard-room, and, being searched, the articles named were, surely enough, discovered upon his person. As Private Smith had hoped, the temptation to take the silver piece had been irresistible.

"The soldier fellow gave them to me," he cried, sullenly.

But Private Smith only smiled. "Now, why should I give a convict half-a-crown?" he demanded, with quiet protest.

That was sufficient. The soldier turned to depart; and as he did so, he bent upon the convict a sly glance and gave a dry little chuckle just after the manner of Vaudois' own chuckling laughter which he had imitated a thousand times in the days long past.

Vaudois started and stared. "By heavens, you are——"

But a door closed between them, and the soldier heard no more.

Vaudois was punished. He was drafted to the heavy labor gangs; and the much-desired ticket-of-leave had to be worked for over again.

And I fear Private Smith felt more delight at having overreached his old enemy than compunction for the rather tricky way he had managed it!—Chambers' Journal.

A ROYAL CORNER.

Comical Breach of Etiquette by an American in London.

An American attending a wedding reception in a great house in London congratulated bride and bridegroom, and passed the usual compliments with the host and hostess.

There was a great throng of guests, and he could not linger at the entrance of the drawing room, when there were many behind him anxious to offer their greetings.

Perceiving a quiet corner to the right of the bride, where a gentleman and a lady were standing apart from the other guests, he went directly to it, unwittingly coming to a stop between two royal personages.

The American was not aware of the fact that he was face to face with one of the queen's daughters, and had turned his back upon another member of the royal family. He stood quietly looking about, hoping to see some acquaintance in the company with whom he might have a chat; and soon became uncomfortably conscious that he was attracting attention, and that the hostess and bride were casting uneasy glances in the direction of the corner where he had taken shelter. While the drawing room was crowded, the company of guests with one consent avoided the secluded corner where he and his two royal companions were stationed.

An acquaintance in the background perceived his mistake, and coming within hailing distance motioned to him. He left his two companions in exclusive occupation of the corner, turning his back upon both as he edged his way through the throng while everybody stared at him. When he reached the spot where his acquaintance was waiting for him, the stage whisper was breathed into his ear:

"You have been poaching on royal preserves. You are a privileged character because you are an American, but no Englishman ventures to turn his back upon a prince or a princess. People were staring you out of countenance because they took it for granted that you must be a royal personage, yet they were unable to identify you."

The answer might have been made that every American is a sovereign by the divine right of equality of free citizenship; but this would have been a meaningless pleasantry in an English drawing room, where social etiquette has a sanctity superior to loyalty to democratic principle.

The American thanked his friend for rescuing him from an embarrassing position, and then stood by and watched the corner where royalty was isolated from too close contact with the world of wealth and fashion.

No guest approached the royal pair. Their presence was an act of condescension to the host and hostess, and they remained on exhibition as the patrons of this social function without having their corner invaded. Everybody was careful not to approach them too closely, and there was a general sense of relief when they departed, and the necessity for backing away from them on side tracks was removed.—Youth's Companion.

A MEXICAN NEW WOMAN.

She Is a Thoroughly Capable and Careful Railroad Station Agent.

There are many things of interest along the line of railroad between Puebla and Oaxaca, Mexico, but few attract the northern traveler more than the station agent at Etla. This is Concha Bianca, a young woman with honest brown eyes and a great mass of wavy black hair. Etla, her post of duty, is the place where the Indians flock from the mountains for 100 miles around for their annual feasts, and also the shipping point for the big haciendas in the fertile valleys among these same mountains. When the train stops at Etla in the dark, a young woman in white, for Senorita Concha dresses to match her surname, stands at the door of the express car, lantern in hand, checking the packages on the big receipt book. When the freight train stops, she flits in and out of the long line of cars, telling the brakemen what to take and what to leave. She goes from one end of the train to the other, seeing that no mistakes are made. The bareheaded girl in a white dress is full of business. She wastes no time on empty words. The trainmen respect her. She does everything about the station but handle the baggage. There are plenty of stout Mexicans of the other sex hanging about for that work.

Concha Bianca is so well esteemed by the management of the road that she has been twice promoted, until now she has one of the most important stations under her care. She does all the telegraphing, besides attending to the receiving and shipping of freight. It was her knowledge of telegraphing that got the young woman her first recognition. Her father and two brothers were operators. She learned to use the key. A station was given to her where there was not much to do besides the telegraphing. Her aptitude for railroad work attracted the attention of General Manager Morcom, and the promotion followed. Concha Bianca lives in the station. Her mother keeps house for her, and a younger sister sits at the telegraph table learning the vocation of the new woman in Mexico. The conductors have got in the way of pointing out to travelers Senorita Concha along with the ruins of the ancient city on the mountain top, the site where the battle of Tehuacan was fought, the hieroglyphics on the cliff at the entrance to Rio Salada canyon and other objects of interest.—Chicago Chronicle.

Chinese Royalty.

The present emperor of China is Huang Hsu, who succeeded to the throne Jan. 12, 1875. He was one of the youngest monarchs who ever ascended the throne, being at the date of accession only 3 years old. There have been 22 dynasties in China, the royal history of this country being better ascertained than that of any other which reaches back to ancient times. With some few breaks, the Chinese have had a regular succession of sovereigns since Fuhhi, who, the Chinese say, reigned from B. C. 2852 to 2737. According to Chinese tradition, Fuhhi was no less a personage than the Noah of the Scriptures, who, after leaving his ark on Mount Ararat, traveled east and founded the Chinese empire. Chinese history asserts that several of their early monarchs ruled for over a century each; one reigning over China for 115 years, another for 102, another for 100, and so on. It is considered probable by historians that these figures represent rather dynasties than the reigns of individual sovereigns. China has had in almost direct descent, with no more than two or three breaks in the history of the royal family, 33 sovereigns, 92 emperors, 2 Tartar rulers, 6 Mogul emperors and 3 empresses.

The Old Man's Decision.

"I dunno what to do with him," said the old gentleman. "He won't work, he won't study, spends half the day fishin' and the other half loafin, smashes the crockery ware if the breakfast don't suit him and walks and talks in his sleep. I've had seven doctors to examine him, and they're all at sea about him. So I've just arrived at the conclusion that he's one of these darned long haired geniuses that's built to write books and have monuments on the installment plan when they die of starvation!"—Atlanta Constitution.

THE LITTLE GIRL THAT GREW UP.

She was sitting up straight in a straight-backed chair;
There wasn't a snarl in her shining hair,
There wasn't a speck on her dainty dress,
And her rosy face was full of distress.

When I drew near to this maiden fair,
She suddenly rumpled her shining hair,
And dropping down "in a heap" on the floor,
Uplifted her voice in a wail most sore.

"Now, what is the matter, my pretty maid?"
"I'm all grown up!" she dolefully said,
"And I'm lonesome, as lonesome as lonesome can be,
For Humpty Dumpty and Riddle-Me-Ree.

"There's Little Boy Blue, who used to creep
Under our haystack, and fall asleep;
He isn't my friend since mother dear
'Did up' my hair in this twist so queer!

"And the Dog and the Fiddle, they left me, too,
When the baby into a woman grew;
The Dish has hidden away with the Spoon,
And the Cow has stayed at the back of the moon!

"The Little-Old-Woman who-Swept-the Sky
Is caught in her cobwebs high and dry;
And Jack and his Beanstalk I cannot find
Since I began to improve my mind.

"I wouldn't be scared—not a single mite—
If the Bugaboo I should meet to-night;
The Bogy Man I'd be glad to see—
But they'll never, no, never, come back to me!

"I watched in the garden last night at dark,
A fairy favor to find, but—hark!
My mother is calling—don't you hear?—
'Young ladies don't sit on the floor, my dear!'"
—Zion's Herald.

Young Jimmy Steevens went from the plow to the bayonet, with little intervening time in which to prepare for the handling of his new implement. The intention had been that young Steevens should stick to the plow, for his father and mother were getting old, and the two elder brothers had already gone to the war, expecting to be home in three months, and now two years had passed without their return; one of them, indeed, it was guessed, would never come back, although his name was not in the list of dead, but in the apprehensive roll-call of the missing.

Much as the farm needed Jimmy, his country appeared to need him more, and it called out his name blindfold, by means of the draft. There being no money in the Steevens family to buy a substitute, Jimmy let go the handle of the plow and shouldered a gun. There was little time to waste in the camp of instruction, for the country was loudly calling for more men, and a farmer's boy can stop a bullet as well as the most expert soldier, even though he may not direct it with much accuracy. So with the farm-yard cries scarcely out of his ears, Jimmy found himself in the rough and ready turmoil of the camp, flung unprepared into soldiering; splendid material to make a warrior of in time, through the hard, unsympathetic handling of that great machine, the army. If but the bullet that was searching for him failed to find him for some months, what with marching, countermarching and sleeping in a blanket, Jimmy would be as good a soldier as the rest of them, ready to kill or be killed.

Hard as farm work may be, it is at least regular, and in the quiet of the country a man gets a good night's sleep. Jimmy found that the only regular thing about soldiering was its irregularity. He had been up two days and a night on the cars, he had marched, not knowing where he was going, counter-marched, halted, slept when he could, bugled up again, as it seemed, almost before he had lain down, and of all things on earth that Jimmy most wanted was one uninterrupted good night's sleep; but grim fate, who was waiting for him, decreed that Jimmy should be sent out from midnight till 4 o'clock as a sentry, where, most important of all things he was not to do, he must not fall asleep. The Captain had the unfortunate idea that young fellows fresh from the farm, or from the workshop, made better sentinels than the old stagers who were up to the tricks of the trade.

It was ten minutes to 12 when Jimmy was awakened by a rough shake from a rough hand grasping his shoulder. He was drunken with sleep, and would have given anything for another hour of it, but he was marched through the camp, and then across a narrow field to the edge of a plantation; here he relieved a man whom he could not see in the darkness, and who had been standing under a tree.

Jimmy's instructions were that he was not to march up and down nor to move from the foot of the tree; he was not to fire his gun unless directly attacked, but if he heard anyone approach he must make for the camp as silently as he could and give warning. If suddenly surrounded, he was to fire his gun, but it was impressed upon him that the great point was to keep the enemy in ignorance of the fact that he was there; therefore he must not walk, nor move, but stand with his back against the tree and keep his ears wide open.

The relieved man of the guard walked noiselessly away, and Jimmy was left alone in the deep darkness caused by the overshadowing tree. He was at the edge of a wood, and if the enemy came, it would be through that bit of forest.

The night was very clear, very silent, and very dark. The clearness of the air was shown by the brilliant twinkling of the stars. Jimmy pulled out his open-faced silver watch, and found that by holding it at a certain angle, the light from one clear star would just enable him dimly to discern the time, although he had to look sharply to see the position of the large hands on the broad, smooth face of the watch.

"Five minutes after twelve," said Jimmy to himself, repeating the words over and over, but somehow they seemed to convey little meaning to his partially-stupefied brain. "Five minutes after twelve," he reiterated, and closed his tired eyes for a second until he could comprehend what he was saying to himself; when he opened them and stared again at his watch he was startled nearly out of his wits. At first he thought the minute hand had dropped ten minutes. It was now a quarter after twelve. In that seeming second he had been asleep ten minutes, standing with the watch in his hand. It frightened him to think that this was possible; he imagined that under such circumstances a man would have fallen. If, with his back against the tree, he could sleep as comfortably as lying in his own bed at the farm, what might not happen before his long four hours' watch was over? If he could only pace up and down, he might keep himself awake, but to stand there like a statue—the very thought made him shudder. The safety of an army probably depended upon his vigilance. He must keep awake at all hazards, for the army's sake, if not for his own. He knew that the penalty of sleep was death. "I must keep awake; I must keep awake," he kept repeating to himself; then he was astonished to hear his father say: "Come, Jimmy, it is time to get up; this will never do, you know." He saw the kindly face of the old man before him.

"It isn't daylight yet, father," he said, and as he spoke he saw above him the clear starlit sky, and he gasped, "I have been asleep again."

With trembling hands he took out the silver watch. Actually the bright star seemed to have shifted in the sky. He rubbed his eyes two or three times before he could persuade himself that the watch was not playing tricks with him. It was seven minutes to 1 o'clock.

"I have been asleep for nearly three-quarters of an hour," he said with horror, as he placed the watch in his vest pocket again. He picked up his gun with a bayonet on the end of it, and swung it backward and forward from hand to hand to keep himself awake; all at once he missed it, and it fell clattering among the dead leaves at the foot of the tree. He picked it up quickly and stood, at once all alert, at the foot of the tree to listen. Nothing but the deepest stillness surrounded him. He leaned the gun against the tree and moved his arms up and down. He blinked at the stars, and the movement of his arms seemed to become more and more mechanical, until at last a wagon half-laden with new-made hay drove up beside him, and he saw his father on the load driving the horses.

"Come, Jimmy," he said, "this is the last load, and it looks like rain."

"I don't see, father, how I am to stand sentry and load hay at the same time," replied Jimmy.

"Oh," said the old man, "it's quite easy. You may as well be doing that as moving your arms up and down."

Jimmy saw there was truth in this, and noticing the haycocks beside him he took a pitchfork in his hand and dug it deep into the sweet-smelling hay. The pitchfork sank down through the hay and struck something; then wagon and haycock both disappeared, and Jimmy found himself trying to extricate the point of his bayonet from one of the gnarled roots of the tree. He was in despair.

"I may as well lie down and be shot for it," he said dismally. "I can't keep awake if I am to stand still."

He looked again at his watch. It was twenty minutes past one. He had some thought of saving himself by rushing into camp and crying that he heard some one coming through the wood, but he knew that would be treachery to comrades, all of whom were doubtless sound asleep. So he set his ingenuity to work to keep himself awake. He needed a sharp lesson, he told himself, and so he prepared one.

Searching his pockets, he found a piece of string. He made a loop with it which he put round his wrist; then, over the lower branch of the tree, he wrapped the unlooped end of the string three or four times, so that if the weight of his arm came upon the loop the cord would untwine from the branch and his hand would come down. He leaned his gun against the tree with the bayonet point upwards, and his open palm hovering a few inches above the sharp needle of the bayonet.

"I shall stand this way till four o'clock," he said," and if I fall asleep my hand will drop upon the bayonet point."

Again he looked at his watch and saw it was half past one. Two hours and a half still to stand guard! As he stared out into the night he suddenly saw an officer and soldier before him. The officer had spoken in a low, threatening voice, but the import of the words were completely missed by Jimmy's dazed mind.

"What did you say, sir?" asked Jimmy.

"You were asleep at your post," said the man.

"I swear I was not," cried Jimmy, and then he wondered why his hand had not dropped on the bayonet point. He felt for his gun; it was not there.

"You need not search for your weapon," said the officer. "I have it. You were asleep at your post. Here, Johnson," he added in a low voice, "take this fellow's place. Come, sir, you are my prisoner."

Jimmy hadn't a word to say, but followed the man into the camp. They passed between the silent tents, seeing sentinels standing here and there like statues. At last, near the center of the encampment, they came to a large tent which showed that a light was burning within. The Sergeant, or whoever he was (Jimmy had been too recent a recruit to know the distinction of the army), raised a flap of the tent and entered. An officer with stern and haggard face looked up from a rough table whereon he was writing. The Sergeant said to him:

"Caught asleep at his post, sir."

"Ah," said the officer with a deep frown on his face, and drawing a long breath.

"I took his gun away from him and had to speak twice to him before he awoke."

"Ah," repeated the officer; then to Jimmy: "What have you to say, sir?"

"I suppose it's true," admitted Jimmy. "I did my best to keep awake."

"The usual excuse," replied the officer, turning to his writing again.

"Place him under guard till daybreak. Then have out a file of twelve men and shoot him."

"Good God!" cried Jimmy, "you surely don't murder a man who has come to fight for you in that off-hand way without even hearing what he has to say for himself."

"I have heard you," rejoined the officer quietly. "Take him away, Sergeant."

The Sergeant grasped young Steevens roughly by the arm and led him out of the tent.

"This isn't right, you know," protested Jimmy. "I must be tried by a jury or something."

"Oh, don't trouble about that, sonny," replied the Sergeant. "What the General says is usually right; if there is anything wrong about it there will be an inquiry later, but that won't help you much. See, it is beginning to get light in the east already."

"What time was it when you found me?" asked Jimmy, in despair.

"We found you at four o'clock, when we came to change guard."

Then Jimmy saw that further protest was useless. He had slept two hours and a half.

"Oh, if I had only another chance," he groaned. "I don't feel much like sleep now. Don't you think the General would give me another chance?"

The Sergeant shook his head unsympathetically.

"Too much depends on it," he said. "The General has wanted to make an example for some time, short and sharp, and you're the man to furnish the example."

The Sergeant turned Jimmy over to two armed men.

"Guard this youngster," he said. "He's to be shot at daybreak, and it's getting near that time now. I'll go and rout out a squad. Don't waste any time lamenting, youngster." This to Jimmy: "If you have any prayers, now's your time."

"It's all irregular," cried Jimmy to the sentries on each side of him. "A man's life can't be taken away at the simple word of another man."

But the sentries' business was not to answer, so they stood, two grim, voiceless automatons, one on either side of him. All the time there was running in Jimmy's mind a horrible sense of the irregularity of it all. If the country, if the newspapers knew of this, there would be a fuss made, but he felt that when the fuss came it would be too late to help him. The steady tramp of a number of men broke into his reverie. The gray of the coming day was spreading over the east.

"Right about! March!" said the Sergeant, and Jimmy mechanically marched as he was told.

They stood him up with his back against a tree, the twelve men drawn in line before him, and appallingly near.

"I won't have my eyes bandaged," said Jimmy, "I want to see them fire."

"Very well," replied the Sergeant, putting the handkerchief in his pocket nonchalantly, as if it were a point not worth discussing.

Jimmy felt as if he would choke. His heart was beating with tremendous rapidity, and his breath came in thick gasps. There was a short, sharp command from the Sergeant and the twelve rifles were leveled at his breast. He heard the word "Fire," and then the ringing of a dozen shots, and it struck him as curious that they did not go off simultaneously, but with a perceptible interval between, as if some had hesitated to pull the trigger. Then the amazing fact struck him that all the bullets had gone through the palm of his hand, which was the more astonishing because he had kept his hands behind him. He found himself looking curiously at the palm of his hand, and feeling the warm blood trickle over it.

"Well, I'll be blessed," said Jimmy; "this was a dream, too, but what a horrible one. My hand has come down on the bayonet point, after all. I wonder how long I've been asleep this time. It was half past one when I last looked at my watch."

Jimmy pulled out the big silver timepiece once more, and turned it toward the glittering star. It still seemed to be half past one, but as he looked closer he saw that the minute hand had moved just perceptibly beyond the half-past point.

"Good heavens!" gasped Jimmy in amazement; "have I dreamt all that ghastly stuff in thirty seconds. But, hang it, I knew the General's proceedings weren't regular."

The pain in Jimmy's palm kept him awake till four o'clock and release came.—Luke Sharp, in Detroit Free Press.

Treatment of Balky Horses.

Notwithstanding the fact that the press continually admonishes whom it may concern that it does no good to whip or pound a balky horse, almost every owner or driver of one does it today. It is probably the greatest piece of horse folly in existence. It is not a remnant of barbarism, but it is continued barbarity, and brings out what original sin there is in a man.

The brain of a horse can retain but one idea at a time. If the idea is to sulk, whipping only intensifies it. A change of that idea, then, is the only successful method of management. This may be accomplished in scores of ways, a few of which are here named: Tie a handkerchief about his eyes; tie his tail to the bellyband or backband; fasten a stick in his mouth; tie a cord tightly around his leg; clasp his nostrils and shut his wind off until he wants to go; unhitch him from the vehicle and then hitch him up again, or almost any way to get his mind on something else.

Whipping or scolding always does harm. The treatment should always be gentle. There are more balky drivers than horses.—National Stockman.

Water Supplied by Siphon.

Siphoning water is one of the simplest methods of getting a supply for irrigation or building. Where there is a body of water about the buildings, but separated from them by such a height of ground or ridge that water will not naturally flow through a pipe from the supply to the source of consumption, it is often possible to use a siphon. A siphon consists of a tube bent at a point nearer one end than at the other, giving a long and a short arm. If the tube be filled with water, the column of water in the long arm is heavier than the column in the short arm. As the heavier column starts to run down out of the tube, a vacuum is created at the bend, and the lighter column of water in the short arm is constantly forced up to fill the constantly produced vacuum at the bend, the stream being thus made constant. The water must first be started through any large pipe by a pump, but when once the flow is started, there is no need for the pump. If the pipe and the shut-off are perfectly air-tight, the stream will begin to flow again when turned on.—Agriculturist.

Warm Weather Chicken Roosts.

During the summer and early autumn months chickens do much better if allowed to roost out of doors nights. Plenty of fresh air makes them vigorous and hardy. Some protection is needed, however, to protect them from showers, and the attacks of owls and hawks that would especially trouble them if roosting in trees. A simple roof attached to the side of a building is shown in the illustration. It is easy to build, can be taken down in the fall, and answers the purpose admirably.

INEXPENSIVE CHICKEN ROOSTS.

Put the chicks to roost once or twice and they will soon go to their new quarters of their own accord.

New Fodder Crops.

New fodder crops continue to attract much attention at the Vermont station. Soja beans of the green and black varieties have proven satisfactory each year. No other leguminous hoed crop has given better returns in tonnage of green fodder, dry matter, or protein. The green variety yielded at the rate of six and a half tons green and two tons dry fodder, and nearly one-quarter of a ton of protein to the acre. Good growths were made of hairy and spring vetches with and without oats, but after experience with these crops for several years at the Vermont station, they are considered unequal to peas and oats. Serradella yielded about a ton of dry matter per acre, and is recommended as a promising forage crop that is rich in protein.—Agriculturist.

Sugar Beets for Cows.

I think very favorably of the raising of sugar beets to feed to stock, especially to milch cows. I feed about four quarts of beets, chopped up, with three pints of cornmeal and one pine of cottonseed meal for morning ration; at night I substitute mixed feeds, or shorts, for the roots. I like a change in the roots, giving one morning beets, the next carrots, and then potatoes, as I have them to spare. I think stock like a change in their diet as well as we do. There is a very perceptible falling off in the flow of milk as soon as I stop feeding roots.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Rational Pig Feeding.

Careful experiments have shown that the liberal feeding of foods rich in protein—which is the so-called flesh-forming matter of the food—greatly increases the growth of pigs. The reason for this is quite evident and simple. It is that this food so encourages the development of muscular tissue, of which the vital organs mostly consist, that the digestion and assimilation of the food are made much easier and effective; that the food is eaten with better appetite, and is far better digested. In fact, the machinery of the pig is so much improved by this feeding that its work is done much more effectively and consequently so much more profitably.—Agriculturist.

To Make the Farm Pay.

One of the greatest hindrances to profitable farming is a desire to go too fast at first and to purchase things we could get along without. The obliging agents tell you that you need not trouble about the money; your note will do just as well; but you will find that you must pay big interest for the privilege of going in debt, and you are always at a disadvantage to your creditor. Have the money ready to pay, and you can then make your half of the bargain. Take good care of your farm and your stock, and they will furnish the money for necessary outlays.

I will just say to young men who expect to make farming their occupation, that they may expect hard work and plenty of it, and will not need to join any base-ball nine for exercise; but if they take care of their health and habits it will not hurt them, for I have tried it for over sixty years, and am today a well-preserved man. I can truly say that with the blessing of our Heavenly Father upon the labors of myself and family I have made farming pay.—New York Tribune.

How to Draw a Stump.

My experience has taught me that for those using capstan grub and stump machines or otherwise pulling in a horizontal direction, it is advisable to hitch to the stump in the manner illustrated. If the chain is fastened to a large side root or to a large root at the side nearest the machine, double as much power is required as if it were hitched on the opposite side and the chain passed over the stump, either if hitched to a root and passed over, or when hitched to the further side of a high stump near the top and passed over.—Egbert Boukma, Kent County, Michigan.

TO PROPERLY DRAW A STUMP.

Locating the Pear Orchard.

A slightly descending slope is most favorable in order to precipitate drainage and the discharge of surplus surface water, but it is not essential that any particular point of the compass should be secured. Shelter from the rake of the wind is important. The pear is a companionable tree and will luxuriate when supported by other trees around it. In close garden culture a degree of humidity is preserved and there is less evaporation from the foliage where the strong winds are broken, the growth will be more vigorous and healthy. There must, however, be sufficient air and sunlight to mature the wood and the fruit. If the site is high, it will be an advantage to plant an evergreen to the windward, both for the health of the trees and also to prevent the falling of the fruit during high winds. On the other hand, a low, cold and peaty position, subject to fogs and frosty nights, is objectionable. A strong, retentive loam inclining to clay is a preferable soil.

The Right Way to Feed Horses.

The receptacle for the horse's grain should never be made of wood, but always of iron, which is easily kept clean and sweet. A few handfuls of dry meal added to each feed of oats will cause the horse to eat much slower, chew his food more perfectly, and thereby be kept in more perfect condition, thorough mastication being necessary to good digestion. If the weather is cold, let the meal be largely of corn, increasing the amount of fine feed, as shorts, as the weather becomes warm, with a little oil cake toward spring.—Our Animal Friends.

Snow.

When heavy falls of snow come get out the snow plow and open the paths before the snow crusts over. It will save labor to open the roads at once. A foot-wide hemlock plank, sixteen feet in length and two inches in thickness, cut in half and nailed together V-shaped, will make a first-class plow.

Pruning Grape Vines.

It is all right to prune grape vines in early winter. It gives the trellises a neater appearance to have the brush removed and the canes tied up. There will be other things to look after in early spring.—Epitomist.

The Dairy.

Washing out the buttermilk is much more economical of labor than working it out.

All reasonable care should be taken to prevent the cows from drinking stagnant water.

Brine salting of butter is wasteful and inaccurate. The most satisfactory way is to salt on the butter worker, weighing both salt and butter.

The power to consume, digest and assimilate nutritious food is what is desired of the cow at maturity; and to receive this, the calf must be well fed.

No other matter about the farm will so poorly stand being made a thing of secondary interest as the dairy. A very little neglect will go a long way toward destroying the profit. Neglect is sure to attend that which is not of a first consideration.

S. Baring-Gould. Miss Davies was an English gentlewoman who for eighty-two years survived heroic treatment, and kept a careful record of it.

How thankful her letters make us that we do not live in the first years of this century! For she details how she was obliged to take many a bolus, a pill of the size of a pigeon's egg, not hard, but of putty-like consistency.

How was such a thing got down the throat? Was it sent down with a ramrod, as geese are fed in Alsace so as to give them liver complaint? We can only wonder.

Then came the administration of drenches. Now I am sufficiently old to remember how I was dealt with by my grandmother. She had a pewter spoon, with a hollow handle and a hinged lid to the bowl. This horrible instrument was filled with castor-oil till it could not retain another drop. Then her thumb was applied to the open end of the handle, and so long as it was held there none of the fluid would flow from the spoon.

When my resistance was overcome, the great pewter spoon was rammed into my mouth. I can recall the exertions exercised on my jaws to force my teeth apart to allow of the admission of this spoon. Then, when it rested on my tongue, occupying my mouth wholly, the thumb of my grandmother was lifted, and instantly the whole contents were projected down my throat.

But that is not all.

Frances Davies repeatedly mentions in her letters that whenever she had a bilious headache, at the ages of 80, 81, 82, she had leeches, five and six at a time, applied to her temples. Conceive of such treatment! It is marvelous how any old ladies were left when thus bebolused, bedrenched and beleeched.

There was, however, a fourth horror to which the old lady refers, and with which I in my youth made intimate acquaintance—Gregory's powder—a hideous gray compound, usually administered in red currant or raspberry jam—but sometimes in water.

This is nothing more nor less than calomel; and it is perhaps due to the amount of mercury taken in this form that the teeth of the generation now passing, and of its children, are so liable to decay—for I do not believe that horrible Gregory's powder is to be got out of the systems of Englishmen under two or three generations.

Laurence Hutton's First Poem.

Laurence Hutton is contributing to St. Nicholas a series of reminiscenses of his boyhood in New York, under the title of "A Boy I Knew."

The Boy's earliest attempts at versification were found, the other day, in an old desk, and at the end of almost half a century. The copy is in his own boyish, ill-spelled print; and it bears no date. The present owner, his Aunt Henrietta, well remembers the circumstances and the occasion, however, having been an active agent in the acts the poem describes, although she avers that she had no hand in its composition. The original, it seems, was transcribed by The Boy upon the cover of a soap-box, which served as a headstone to one of the graves in his pets' burying-ground, situated in the backyard of the Hudson street house, from which he was taken before he was 9 years of age. The monument stood against the fence, and this is the legend it bore—rhyme, rhythm, meter, and orthography being carefully preserved:

Three little kitens of our old cat
Were berrid this day in this grassplat.
They came to there deth in an old water pale,
And after loosing their breth
They were pulled out by the tale.
These three little kitins have returned to their maker,
And were put in the grave by The Boy,
Undertaker.

Cement for Cloth.

Use thin sheet gutta percha, which can be purchased of the manufacturers especially for tailors' use. Place a piece of the tissue between the layers of cloth to be cemented and press with a hot iron. This causes the cloth to adhere firmly on account of the melting of the gutta percha.

MARRIED.

ARCULARIUS—ALBERS—At the residence of the bride's parents, Georges Creek, March 17, 1897, by A. V. Davidson, J. P., Wm. Arcularius to Miss Annie Albers.

DIED.

LUCAS.—At Keeler, March 18, 1897, Mrs. John Lucas, a native of Germany, aged about 45 years.

Receiver Eibeshutz returned from San Francisco on Wednesday evening last.

Mrs. M. Goodale and daughter Florence came down from Fish Springs yesterday.

Charles Anthony, the leading merchant of southern Inyo, was in town during the week.

W. J. Ryan left for Denver Col. on Tuesday whence he is expected to return in a few weeks.

On account of the heavy snow on the foot-hills, stocks of fire-wood in this town are becoming depleted.

S. G. Sneden, Esq., of Bishop was in Independence during the week on business in the Superior Court.

Some alarm and excitement was caused here on Tuesday evening, through the burning out of H. P. Cartier's chimney.

Several of those going to the fight from Independence and Bishop, were entertained on their way at Hawthorne with an impromptu dance.

In consequence of the late considerable shipments of prime cattle from this valley, we hear that animals for home consumption have become very scarce.

Omie Mairs left town on Tuesday in company with F. Holbert for Los Angeles with a band of 200 beef cattle. They will probably be absent a month.

Supt. Hoskins came in from the Reward mine this morning, bringing bar No. 30, valued at $2,000. This is the result of 15 days' run of the mill.

The Rebekahs of this district met together on Thuradsy the 4th inst,. to institute a lodge, which they hope shortly to inaugurate. This lodge will be called the Owen Lodge.

Saturday's south train carried 70 passengers, all en route to Carson to see the fight. They laid over one night in Hawthorne and made things lively for the nonce.—Bulletin.

A distinguished crowd including a few forty-niners, gathered at Rhine's store on Thursday forenoon to hear the contents of the telegraphic bulletins, as they came through from the fight.

Al. Goodman arrived by Monday's train; Mr. Goodman was here several years ago in the employ of his uncle A. W. Eibeshutz, and returns here on a visit in the hope that the change may improve his health.

I. H. Mulholland underwent an operation for appendicitis last Sunday at the Homeopathic Sanatorium, San Francisco. The operation was a success in every particular, and Mr. Mulholland is recovering as rapidly as can be expected.

The St. Patrick's dance given last night by the young men of Independence was a pronounced success. An elegant supper was served at Mairs' Hotel at midnight. Dancing was resumed after supper and was thoroughly enjoyed until the early morning hours.

W. J. Ryan and Norman Mairs returned on Sunday from the copper mine, which the former has bonded from A. F. Mairs and J. F. Welsh. We understand that a force of six men have just commenced to work on this property, and that there is a chance of its proving a successful venture.

THE BIG FIGHT.

FITZSIMMONS WINS.

Gentleman Jim's Pompadour Lowered in the 14th Round.

A Fast and Furious Battle from Start to Finish.

CARSON, March 17.—The crowd here is extremely large, and all the foreign visitors to the sagebrush country are eager to glean the latest news of the big fighters.

At Corbett's betting was of a desultory character on the big fight, the odds of 10 to 6 remained all night, occasionally 10 to 7 was offered, but there was only a small amount of money in sight. Corbett men were apparently waiting for something sure. Corbett is considered favorite with the majority of eastern experts and California visitors are almost solid for the Native Son.

Jimmy Wakely looks on Corbett as a sure winner, Al Smith expresses himself likewise while Billy Muldoon thinks Fitz has something up his sleeve that should do the trick.

Corbett will enter the ring to-day close onto 180 pounds while Fitz will probably tip the scales at 168.

Billy Delaney last night won the toss up for positions, which means that Fitz will begin the battle.

The mines on the Comstock have been closed down to enable the miners to see the fight.

RING SIDE,
10:30 a. m.

The great arena is beginning to fill up and the streets adjacent are blocked with people. All the notable sports of the world are here to see the battle of the century.

John L. Sullivan has just appeared resplendent in a shining silk tile. The noble of them all is greeted with tumultuous cheering.

Jimmy Colville will be time-keeper for Corbett, Billy Muldoon for Dan Stuart. Billy Madden handles the gong.

Corbett and Fitz are undergoing final preparations.

It is estimated that there are 4,000 people seated now and another special train to arrive.

Billy Madden announces from the ring that after the Corbett and Fitzsimmons go the double contest between Green and Smith and Flaherty and Hawkins will take place about 3 p. m.

11:59 a. m.

Fitz has just entered the ring bare headed and attired in a japanese bathrobe. Gentleman Jim enters and is greeted with great applause by the vast audience.

Behind Corbett are Charley White, Delaney, Jeffries, McVey, Joe Corbett, Billy Woods and Al Hampton. In Fitz's corner are Martin Julian, Ernest Roeber, Stenzler and Hickey. Both men are looking in the finest kind of shape.

Billy Madden introduces the referee and the men proceed to strip. Fitz looks light but is a bunch of muscles. Corbett looks 15 pounds heavier and his skin as well as Fitz's looks like polished mahogany.

Julian refuses to shake hands. Time is called at 12:27.

14TH ROUND.—Corbett's leads blocked. Jim lands that left jab again on Fitz's head. Fitz counters with a terrible right swing on Corbett's neck and has Corbett going back for a few moments. Fitz lands a terrible left hand jab on Corbett's stomach and Corbett goes to his knees with a frightful look of agony on his face. Time keeper calls the seconds, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten; but Corbett comes to his feet and rushes to Fitz and endeavors to strike him. There is a terrible uproar. The decision has not been given yet. Geo. Siler decides that Fitz wins.

The blow that did the business landed over Corbett's heart, and he collapsed after one of the greatest fights in history. The last round lasted just one minute and forty-five seconds.

The contest between Green and Smith was settled in four rounds. Green was the winner.

The mill between Flaherty and Hawkins was settled in one round. Hawkins being the victor.

Dangers of the Grip

The greatest danger from La Grippe is of its resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough remedy taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of this dread disease. It well effect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

From Cripple Creek.

After the big fire in Cripple Creek I took a severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. HENDERSON, editor Daily Advertiser. For sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

There is nothing new in the Cuban war. The fighting is mere bushwhacking on both sides. The advantage is steadily with the insurgents, since delay costs them nothing, while it is a terrible strain upon Spain. In the Phillipines the Spanish are having better luck, and it now looks as if that little rebellion would soon reach its end.

THE MEANING OF IT.

Very often we give the wrong meaning to a word and thereby make serious mistakes. For instance, the true and literal meaning of the word rheumatism is "aches or pains of the muscles, bones and joints of the human body." It is general and not specific. Also the word relief does not mean cure. Relief may be but a short cessation of pain. But when we say St. Jacobs Oil cures rheumatism promptly and permanently, we mean it conquers pain quickly with no return of it, unless the sufferer gives cause for a new attack, and then it will cure again. It matters not whether it is chronic, acute or inflammatory, it will cure. That is sure, be sure of it.

Service a la Bowery.

A waiter from "de Bowery" drifted into town the other day and got a job in a Royal street restaurant. He was dressed in a check suit, walked stiff kneed, with his chin out, and yelled out his orders like a Mississippi mate. His first customer was a gentleman of delicate appetite. The waiter struck a prize-fighter attitude, leaned his head slightly down toward the guest and said:

"Well?"

The guest looked up in surprise. The waiter glanced down at him.

"Well, what can we do for yer, sport?"

Regaining his control, the diner said, "Ah, I'd like something light, waiter."

"Sumtin light? How would a fedder do yer?"

"A what?"

"A fedder. Maybe you might get your whiskers trou a lamp, or p'r'aps a cup of barber's ladder might fit yer mug."

Having delivered himself of these pleasantries, the waiter smiled broadly and tapped his customer lightly on the chest.

"Dere, whiskers, don't get yer peppers on. Dat's a josh to git up yer appetite, see? No stringin, wouldn't an omelet suffiay tickle de cove in yer bread baskey? Say, I can rush it into yer face before yer finish goin up against de pickles. See?"

The delicate gentleman nearly fainted and was rescued by the head waiter, who gave him another attendant and put the Ganymede from wicked New York on the dishwashing list.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Salute Your Wife.

Men do not take off their hats to each other. They nod. Many married women complain of their husbands' incivility in neglecting to treat them with the same politeness they show to their friends. Let all married men remember that marriage does not exempt them from raising their hats both at meeting and saying goodby to their wives. This oversight has often been the cause of a spirit of rebellion in the young wife, who sees in it a reason for fancying that her husband has ceased to care for her or only regards her as a belonging to whom any of the civilities of life are unnecessary because she is his. In the same way a wife should foster all those pretty little ways of making him feel that he is still her Prince Charming. Love is so often kept alive by these outward observances that are the harbingers of refinement that it behooves all to practice them.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Speed of Pigeons.

Experiments have shown that pigeons are able to outstrip the fastest express trains, although on the average they fly at the rate of only about thirty-four miles an hour. Monsieur Rodenbach, in France, believes they can attain a velocity exceeding seventy miles an hour. They are said to be unable to fly long distances in a perfect straight line; apparently they are easily driven aside by shifting air currents.

Exhaustion of Natural Gas.

Recent statistics show that the supply of natural gas in the United States fell off one-half from 1888 to 1895. The decline has been less in Ohio and Indiana than in Pennsylvania, the product in the last named State being worth more than nineteen million dollars in 1888, and less than six million dollars in 1895. Owing to the adoption of less wasteful methods, the falling off has not been so rapid since 1891, but it still amounts to an average decline of five per cent. every year.

Making Glass Resist Fire.

Attention has lately been drawn to a product called "wire-glass," which, it is asserted, presents an effective barrier against fire. It consists simply of a mesh-work of wire embedded in a glass plate. Even when licked by flames and raised to a red heat it does not fall to pieces, and experiments have shown that, employed in windows and skylights, wire-glass not only resists the heat of fire, but also the shattering effects of cold water poured over it while it is yet glowing hot.

A Plant Atoll.

Professor Atkinson, the botanist of Cornell University, has discovered near Ithaca an example of the very rare phenomenon called a "plant atoll." It consists of a ring of plants floating in a pond, with a circle of clear water within the ring. The plants derive their nourishment from the decayed vegetable matter that collects about their roots, and these are gradually becoming anchored to the bottom, so that in time a true ring island will be formed, resembling the coral atolls of the southern oceans.

When Nebraska Was a Lake.

Extensive deposits of ancient volcanic ash in Southwestern Nebraska have lately been turned to useful account as a source of pulverized pumice, which has become an important article of commerce. Professor Salisbury, of the University of Chicago, after examining the localities where the ash is found, concludes that it was deposited in water at a time when that region of country was covered by a lake which is supposed to have existed late in the tertiary period, and the ash is believed to have been borne thither by winds.

Fossils Found by X-Rays.

A curious application of the X-rays to the discovery of unseen things was recently made by Monsieur Lemoine at Rheims. The chalk strata in that part of France contain the fossil bones of birds, reptiles and mammals, and frequently these are shattered in the attempt at removal. It occurred to Monsieur Lemoine that the embedded fossils might be photographed by the aid of the X-rays, since the latter pass readily through chalk, but are largely intercepted by the phosphates of bones. It is reported that his photographs clearly indicate the details of the hidden fossils.

Balata Rubber.

Owing to the increased demand for india-rubber, caused by the use of pneumatic tires for bicycles and other vehicles, there is said to be serious danger of a "rubber famine." The method of gathering india-rubber in tropical countries has been exceedingly wasteful because the easiest way, that of cutting down the trees, has too frequently been adopted. The search for substitutes has resulted in making known the virtues of a South American tree called the balata. This abounds in British Guiana, and the rubber produced from it, while not possessing the electric and some other properties of caoutchouc, is said to answer very well for most of the ordinary purposes of india-rubber.

Wonders of the Brain.

That portion of the substance of the brain which is known as the "gray matter" is supposed to be most intimately related to intellectual action. Sometimes curious aggregations of gray matter are found in particular parts of the brain, and Dr. Frederick Peterson has recently suggested in the Popular Science Monthly that these may be the cause of the extraordinary mental powers occasionally exhibited by persons whose general intellectual capacity hardly rises above that of idiots. Such powers, or aptitudes, always relate to some special faculty, like memory, without including other faculties. The aggregations referred to, Doctor Peterson thinks, might explain the marvellous memory for music exhibited by "Blind Tom," and the still more extraordinary powers of Heinecker, "the child of Lubeck," who lived in the early part of the eighteenth century, and who "knew the chief incidents of the Pentateuch at the age of one year, had mastered all of sacred history at two years, and was intimately acquainted with modern and profane history and geography, and spoke French and Latin, besides his native tongue, at the age of three." When four years old he died.

New York's Sanitation.

The appeal to the public conscience told at last. With that attack in the churches, which had not been without blame, the new era began. That year (1879) a public competition evolved the present type of tenement, far from perfect, but an immense improvement upon the wicked old barracks. The sanitary reformers got the upper hand, and their work told. The death-rate came down slowly. It is to-day, at the end of thirty years, quite 25 per cent. lower than it was when the health department was organized, and New York has been redeemed from a reproach for which there was no excuse, for no city in the world has such natural opportunities for good sanitation.

The immense stride it has taken was measured by the mortality during the unprecedented hot spell of last summer. It was never so great, as, indeed, there never was an emergency like it since records were kept. During the ten days it lasted the heat craved many more victims than the last cholera epidemic during its whole season. Yet, beyond those killed by the direct effects of the sun, the mortality was singularly low; the infant mortality—ever the finger that points unerringly to the sore spots in a community, if any there be—was so noticeably low as to cause a feeling almost of exultation among the sanitary officials. And it was shown, by comparison with earlier hot spells, that the population yielded more slowly to the heat. Where it had taken two or three days to reach the climax of sunstroke, it now took five. The people, better housed, better fed, and breathing clean air in clean streets, had acquired a power of resistance to which the past had no parallel. The sanitarians had proved their case.—"Light in Dark Places," by Jacob A. Riis, in the Century.

Dangerous Umbrella.

Dr. John Kitto, the well-known English writer and commentator on the Bible, was by no means devoid of humor, and he took considerable pleasure in relating some amusing adventures which at one time and another had befallen him. One of these narratives is quoted by Dr. Eadie in his "Life of Dr. Kitto."

Arriving at Constantinople from countries farther to the east, and having learned to regard the umbrella as a mark of high distinction, I was much astonished to find it in very common use there in rainy weather. However, I soon had occasion to learn that traces still remained of the distinction, so usually throughout the East associated with that article.

I resided principally at Orta Khoi, a village on the Bosphorus about three miles above Constantinople; and having urgent occasion, one wet day, to go down to Pera, I set out, umbrella in hand. On arriving at the waterside, I found none of the boats that usually ply between the village and the Golden Horn, and was therefore under the necessity of walking all the way along the road behind the row of buildings that face the Bosphorus.

One of these buildings was a favorite palace of the Sultan, who was then residing in it. As I approached the gate of this mansion, with my umbrella over my head, I observed that one of the sentinels stationed there accosted me in a commanding manner; but not comprehending what he said, I went on. Upon which the soldier ran toward me with his fixed bayonet leveled, and without any indication of a friendly intention toward my person.

That I took my person safely that day to the great city was probably owing to the good nature of a Turk, who was walking close behind me at the moment, and who, on observing the advance of the soldier upon me, snatched my umbrella with violence from my hand, and thrust me forward, partially interposing himself between me and the assailant, who then returned to his station, and allowed me to proceed in peace.

The friendly Turk, in returning my umbrella, endeavored to explain the fact, which I afterward ascertained more distinctly, that it was incumbent on every one to take down his umbrella in passing the actual residence of the Sultan.

I had observed with some surprise that persons walking before me lowered their umbrellas as they approached the palace, and again elevated them when they had passed, notwithstanding the heavy rain, but without imagining that this was a matter of obligation.

I observed on subsequent occasions that persons passing on the Bosphorus in boats never omitted to take down their umbrellas as they approached the front of the mansion which the "brother of the sun and moon" honored with his presence.

Great Thaw.

Some farms in the hill country of New England are provided with so thin a coating of soil, and so abundant a supply of the material of stone wall, as to call for the exercise of unlimited patience and philosophy on the part of the native farmers.

"Uncle Amos," said a summer resident of Ashville, stopping his horse close to Mr. Willet's stone wall, on the other side of which the old farmer stood, "what do you think of the theory that all our rocks came from the north in icebergs originally?"

Uncle Amos, resting from his daily task of removing the stones from his south field and piling them in heaps and mounds, surveyed his questioner in silence for a moment with a solemn face. Then he stooped, and taking up a good-sized stone in each hand, he looked down at them, while keen enjoyment of his prospective joke tugged at the corners of his mouth.

"There's jest one thing I'm clear about," he said slowly, "and that is, if 'tis true, it must have been a mighty warm season when they struck my farm, and no mistake."

The Gold Beetle.

The most remarkable gold beetle in the world are found in Central America. The head and wing cases are brilliantly polished with a luster as of gold itself. To sight and touch they have all the seeming of metal. Oddly enough, another species from the same region has the appearance of being wrought in solid silver, freshly burnished. These gold and silver beetles have a market value. They are worth from £5 to £10 each.

She Meant the Poet.

An English writer suggests that Scottish pronunciation is misleading. "Do you like buns?" asked the governess.

"Yes," said he, "if they are made with sultana raisins and not currants."

Whereupon she blushed, and explained that she meant the poet "Bu'ns."

The Arkansas river was named from a nation of Indians; also called Quappas.

Christian Liberty.—The unwritten constitution of our institutions, the bedrock of our civilization and liberties, is Christian, not pagan.—Rev. A. B. Storms, Methodist, Detroit.

Intellectuality.—All people in this country are intellectual. All the educated. They read the newspapers, and keep posted on affairs. To be an American is to wear the badge of intellectuality.—Dr. Mangasarian, Society of Ethical Culture, Chicago.

Individuality.—This is an age of the individual, and there is no danger that the possibilities of individual expression will be lost. God's purpose is that every man shall stand absolutely on his own individuality.—Rev. S. R. Fuller, Episcopalian, Boston.

Spain.—Spain is a robber. She has appropriated to herself practically all legislative and administrative powers in Cuba. Her electoral laws are such that Spaniards resident in Cuba are always in the majority.—Rev. R. G. Hutchins, Presbyterian, Cleveland.

Old Age.—There is something so fair in a calm old age that causes us to bend the knee almost involuntarily and incline the head in respectful homage. Age can be so beautiful. The passions are held in check. The tempestuous longings of youth are stilled and serenity sits upon the brow of him who has grown old gracefully, upon whose heart time has laid his hand gently.—Rabbi David Philipson, Hebrew, Cincinnati.

The Turk.—The Turk is by instinct a thief and a murderer, and his path is always marked by rapine and the shedding of the blood of the innocent. Cleveland should be praised for what he has dared to say against the bloody work of the Sultan.—Bishop J. P. Newman, Methodist, San Jose, Cal.

Tramps.—A man willing to work and not able to find it has a right to live. The human society that compels a tramp to be is considered out of order. Such a society needs prompt reconstruction. Such a society the twentieth century will set in order.—Rev. M. W. Reed, Independent, Denver.

Gambling.—The sin or crime of gambling has spread itself over society, and is drawing down strong men. It is one of the greatest crime breeders in the land. There is nothing else that causes so much crime and sin—except the one vice of liquor.—Rev. W. A. Gardner, Christian Church, San Francisco.

True Religion.—Scorpions breed under stones. So ceremonial religion often covers all manner of meanness and vicious selfishness. True religion means a life that is absorbed in the person and teaching of Jesus Christ. Whatever detracts from the sacred life and mission of Christ is not Christian, is no part of true religion.—Rev. Dr. Lee, Presbyterian, Cincinnati.

Heretics.—The real heretics are the narrow bigots who insist that no man may have any part in the eternal salvation unless he swallows some creed as impossible as Jonah was for the whale. If I could excommunicate any man it would be the man who presumes to deny all grace to those who live justly with mankind, but who do not accept their clammy dogmas.—Rev. Lyman Ward, Universalist, New York.

WINTER COSTUME.

Happy Conception in Dress for Cold Weather Cycling.

To the enthusiastic cyclist who rides his "silent steed" on a cold day the question of dress is a most important one. His rapid progress accentuates the effect of the low temperature on his body, and unless he is properly clothed he will be very uncomfortable. The old-timers who have ridden for years in all sorts of weather all agree on the costume as pictured above as the ideal one for cold weather. The cyclist should wear a suit of medium weight underclothing. Over the underclothing heavy, closely-woven golf stockings, a heavy, closely-woven sweater or two, if cold enough, and a heavy cycle suit. As his feet, hands and ears will be most susceptible, he should wear fur lined gloves, or, if they are too expensive, heavy woolen gloves, arctic overshoes and a close-fitting cotton skull cap that may be pulled down over his ears.

A Snap Shot.

A little child often not only leads but amuses by original descriptions of ordinary events. Says the Pittsburg Chronicle:

A judge's little daughter, who had attended her father's court for the first time, was very much interested in the proceedings. After her return home she told her mother: "Papa made a speech, and several other men made speeches, to twelve men who sat all together, and then these twelve men were put in a dark chamber to be developed."

Not All Boldness.

Dick—Polly played a rattling good game at poker last night, didn't she?

Dan (who lost some of his money)—Ye-s, I guess she did.

Dick—There's a girl for you! No lack of go about her! All boldness and dash!

Dan—Not all boldness, dear boy! Polly was shy several times last night, when she thought nobody noticed it.—New York Tribune.

From Cuba to Kingsburg.

RAISIN CULTURE IN FRESNO.

What Brought Success Out of Failure to Hon. Z. T. Maxwell.

From the Republican, Fresno, Cal.

The Hon. Z. T. Maxwell, in 1887, having just finished a term in the Missouri legislature, was compelled by ill health to seek change of climate, and after traveling for some months on the Pacific slope, settled in Kingsburg, Fresno County, California, and engaged in raisin culture.

The change from Cuba, Mo., Mr. Maxwell's old home, to the balmy air of Kingsburg, for a time seemed to benefit the invalid, and, for a while, in addition to his labors on the raisin farm, he began to take a prominent part in the county politics, and held several offices of trust in his new state. But ill health was the drawback which prevented him from arriving at the highest political honors, and his active mind chafed under the restraint of an impaired constitution, so that instead of improving he became worse. These facts concerning Mr. Maxwell's health were so well known among the people of Fresno County, that when he lately reappeared on the busy scenes in apparent health, he was warmly congratulated by his numerous acquaintances, and among others the writer of this article.

In response to a request to give the reporter particulars as to the course of his illness, symptoms, cure, and indeed all there was in it, he said:

"You have asked me for more than I could describe. Sometimes I have looked over an alphabetical index of diseases, and fancied I had them all, but general debility, weakness, insomnia, indigestion, constipation, partial atrophy of muscles, headaches, pain in the back and limbs, and general wretchedness was my lot.

"My horizon was contracting, and I supposed that the circle of my vision would never again have anything but my bed for a centre, for on top of my previous ill health, in 1895, I caught la grippe, which brought me so low that I was very nigh the grim portal.

"New Year's day I was despondent and unhappy, not knowing there was such good fortune in store for me, for I had hardly ambition to read the newspaper that was brought me, and threw it on the bed in disgust. As I did so my eye caught the announcement of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and half in anger and half in contempt I read what it said and again threw the paper down. But I could not get this announcement of Pink Pills out of my head, and at last I determined to try them, and I did so. I began to use the pills, following directions carefully, and by the time I had taken the first box my appetite had returned, and I was so invigorated that it almost seemed as if I were renewing my youth. I kept on taking the Pink Pills until I was thoroughly recovered, and now can do more work than for twenty years before.

"I will say that not only have they saved me much expense in doctors' bills, but my life, and I am only too glad to publish this testimonial to the virtues of Pink Pills.

(Signed) "Z. T. Maxwell."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100), by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important, in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

A Kipling Portrait.

He (McPhee) was never a racing engineer and took special pride in saying as much before the Liverpool men, but he had a knowledge of machinery and the humors of ships that he had worked 32 years to gain. One side of his face had been wrecked through the bursting of a pressure gauge in the days when men knew less about pressures than they do now, and his nose rose grandly out of the wreck like a club in a public riot. There were cuts and lumps on his head, and he would guide your forefinger through his short iron gray hair and tell you how he had come by his trademarks. He owned all sorts of certificates of extra competency, and at the bottom of his cabin chest of drawers, where he kept the photograph of his wife, were two or three Royal Humane society medals for saving lives at sea.

Professionally—it was different when crazy steerage passengers jumped overboard—professionally McPhee does not approve of saving life at sea, and he has often told me that a new hell is prepared for stokers and trimmers who sign for a strong man's pay and fall sick the second day out. He believes in throwing boots at fourth and fifth engineers when they wake him up at night with word that a bearing is redhot all because a lamp's glare is reflected red from the twirling metal. He believes that there are only two poets in the world, one being Robert Burns, of course, and the other Gerald Massey. When he has time for novels, he reads Wilkie Collins and Charles Reade, chiefly the latter, and he knows whole pages of "Very Hard Cash" by heart. "They're talking nowadays right smart about the great Napoleon," said Uncle Dan, "but when t'other day the boys asked me who I thought the greatest man, I says 'I don't know. There's Washington, an' Alexander, an' Napoleon, an' lots of others, but, my way of thinkin', Old Abe Lincoln is ahead of 'em all.'

"Greatness isn't jest a bein' stern and solemn-like. Now, Uncle Abraham could hoe his row with any of 'em argyin', an' yet some way he had the swing of them old prophets. That struck me when the war broke out, an' afore I knew it I caught the fever, carried coal oil lamps around with the rest of the crowd, got howlin' about John Brown's body moldering in the ground, and 'By Jinks,' says I, 'I'll jine!'

"Of course, Billy must stay at home to plow and sow and make the corn and hay. He'd just turned fifteen, but as I marched away, blest if there wasn't ma cryin' in his arms, an' Billy yellin' like mad, 'I want a chance to strike for liberty!' Bless me again! in less than a year if I didn't hear one day that Billy had enlisted, too.

"How I watched that boy! Sometimes praying when he kept by my side in battle, sometimes swearing, too, maybe, when he exposed himself too carelessly. At Vicksburg he fell back, crushed and maimed by the parapet fire, and I took him in my arms and bore him back, an', half crazy with fears, dashed at the fort again. Well, he rallied from the wound, but somehow he never seemed so sound as before. There was a wandering strangeness in his manner, like he didn't 'zactly know his mind, and one night, when skirmishes were daily, an' Sherman an' Hood was trying to get the chance for a winning fight, Billy was placed on picket duty where danger hovered thick. I told him to keep his eyes wide open, but after I'd got into my blanket in camp I couldn't sleep. I took my gun and hurried silently to the outposts, reached a spot close underneath the hill, and my heart stopped, for there was a scuffle, a cry, and I saw the forms of half a hundred men. It wan't no time to think. I raised my gun. The good old musket rang out the alarm, the rebels turned and ran. The boy? There he lay, his form stretched out upon the ground, asleep at his post!

"He turned to me an' put his arm around me lovingly. 'I couldn't help it, dad,' he said, smiling his old boyish smile,

"I TOOK HIM IN MY ARMS AND BORE HIM BACK."

and marched away between the guards. I begged, I plead, I swore that Billy wasn't like himself. No use. The sentence came. I appealed to the generals. I got only one answer: 'The death sentence of the court has been approved.' Then I went to Washington to see the President.

"It was my last hope. They wouldn't let me in. They even pushed me back as a carriage drove up. I saw who got out; I tried to attract his attention. 'Who is this man?' says he. 'Only a soldier after an interview,' says the officer. 'Only a soldier?' says he, musingly. 'Periling his life! Only a soldier, fighting the battles of this awful war! Thank God! to speak to me you need no other name. Only a soldier? Come in, my man.' And he led me up the stairs, while ministers and generals waited outside.

"I told him, with sobs half choking me, the story of my grief. His face was sad and furrowed, and he bowed his head as he listened. He looked over the papers carefully. Then he turned, and smiling gently, said, 'We'll let the other fellows do the killing. I think the country will get along with this young fellow running 'round alive.' And then he wrote: 'This sentence disapproved. Restored to his company. A. Lincoln.' Just there I lost my grip. I only cried like a baby. 'You tell your boy,' says he, 'I count on him to fight.'

"In six months Billy stood upon the roll as second corporal. Then he became color bearer of the regiment. We marched through Georgia until we faced the guns of Fort McAlister. A charge was ordered, but at first the rebels fired at such a rate that the ranks wavered. Billy, with face aflame, carried the flag far up in the advance. 'Bring back the colors to the regiment!' cried the colonel. Amid the crack and crash of the guns, the boy replied, 'You bring the regiment to the colors!' Then, with shouts and cheers, the brigade rushed madly on, and before they fairly sensed it, the day was won.

"ONLY A SOLDIER? COME IN, MY MAN."

"Billy had gone down. They had to pry his fingers loose from the flag. There was a smile on his face a thousand years can't make me forget. 'Redeemed at last,' the general came and said, and placed his name among the heroes. They wrapped the Stars and Stripes around my son. When they put him in his new uniform that night, they found his treasures, and among the rest was a picture of Old Abe, and written on its back were the words, a prophecy, 'I've fought, great friend, and died for liberty!'"

LINCOLN'S SWEETHEART.

She Was a Beautiful Kentucky Girl and Had Many Suitors.

Lincoln first met Ann Mayes Rutledge in 1832, when she was 19. She was a beautiful girl and as bright as she was pretty. So fair a maid was not, of course, without suitors. The most determined of those who sought her hand was one John McNeill, a young man who had arrived in New Salem from New York soon after the founding of the town. Ann became engaged to McNeill, but it was decided to put off marriage on account of Ann's youth. After a while McNeill left for his home in the East, saying that he would return in time with his parents. Then it came out that McNeill's real name was McNamar. The New Salem people pronounced him an impostor. A few letters were received from him by Ann, but finally the lover ceased to write to her.

In the spring of 1835 Ann agreed to become Lincoln's wife. New Salem took a cordial interest in the two lovers, and presaged a happy life for them, and all would undoubtedly have gone well if the young girl could have dismissed the haunting memory of her old lover. The possibility that she had wronged him, that he might reappear, that he loved her still, haunted her so persistently that she took to her bed. Her death speedily followed. Lincoln's grief was intense. He was seen walking alone by the river and through the woods, muttering strange things to himself. He seemed to his friends to be in the shadow of madness. They kept a close watch over him; and at last Bowling Green, one of the most devoted friends Lincoln then had, took him home to his little log cabin, half a mile north of New Salem, under the brow of a big bluff. Here, under the loving care of Green and his good wife, Nancy, Lincoln remained until he was once more master of himself.

But though he had regained self-control, his grief was deep and bitter. Ann Rutledge was buried in Concord Cemetery, a country burying ground, seven miles northwest of New Salem. To this lonely spot Lincoln frequently journeyed to weep over her grave. "My heart is buried there," he said to one of his friends. Strange to say, McNamar proved to be an honest man and a faithful though careless lover.

THE IMMORTAL LINCOLN.

An Apotheosis in His Memorable First Inaugural.

In an epoch of convulsion and cataclysm and chaos Abraham Lincoln was introduced into presidential power. He held to the syllogistic and spurned figurative speech. No fustian found favor in his prejudices.

Coming to the end of his first inaugural, Lincoln reached these words: "In your hands, my fellow countrymen, and not in mine, is the momentous issue of civil war. The Government will not assail you. You can have no conflict without being yourselves the aggressors. You have no oath registered in heaven to destroy the Government, while I shall have the most solemn one to preserve, protect and defend it."

"I am loath to close. We are not enemies, but friends. We must not be enemies. Though passion may have strained, it must not break our bonds of affection. The mystic chords of memory, stretching from every battlefield and patriot grave to every living heart and hearthstone all over this broad land, will yet swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as surely they will be, by the better angels of our nature."

Lincoln's Trust in God.

"What I did I did after a very full deliberation and under a very heavy and solemn sense of responsibility," said Lincoln with reference to the emancipation proclamation. "I can only trust in God I have made no mistake. I shall make no attempt on this occasion to sustain what I have done or said by any comment. It is now for the country and the world to pass judgment, and may be take action upon it."

Looking a difficulty square in the face will often kill it dead.

SAW LINCOLN SHOT.

ONE WHO WITNESSED THE GREAT TRAGEDY.

Story of the Man Who Was the First to Reach the Side of the Wounded President—His Clothing Stained by the Blood of the Martyr.

Our Nation's Darkest Day.

There now lives in Philadelphia a gentleman who saw the whole scene of Lincoln's assassination, and was the first to reach the wounded man in the prevailing panic. William Flood is the gentleman's name, and he gave the following graphic account, which is taken down in his exact words:

"At the time the President was shot," said he in answer to a query, "I was in the United States navy and was acting ensign and executive officer on board the steamship Teazer. Captain Silas Owen was the commander, and the ship was located at the navy yard on April 14. That evening Captain Owen, who had been over in the city during the day, came to the ship and suggested that we go to the theater that evening, as Laura Keene was to play 'Our American Cousin,' and the President was to be there. We went to the theater and secured seats in the parquet or orchestra chairs. The President occupied the second box up from the orchestra and second from the stage. Just as the curtain fell on the first act I heard a shot and saw a man jump from the President's box to the stage. As he jumped his foot caught in the folds of the flag that draped the box, and he fell sideways on the stage. It was quite a good jump, and he came very near falling back into the orchestra. He got up and limped away across the stage, brandishing a great long knife in his right hand, and shouted, 'Sic semper tyrannis.'

"In less time than it takes to tell it I was on the stage. How I got there over the heads of the orchestra I really don't remember. Just as I reached the stage Mrs. Lincoln looked out of the box. She was crying and wringing her hands and said: 'They have shot papa; will no one come?' I answered that I would come, and immediately climbed up the side of the boxes to the one the President occupied.

"The President was sitting as if he had fallen asleep. He was breathing, however, and we at once laid him on the floor of the box. I looked for the wound, but at first did not discover it. Miss Keene brought a pitcher of water and I bathed his forehead with that so as to revive him. I then discovered the wound in the back of his head, where the ball had entered, and the blood ran out on my arm and down the side of my coat. Some army officers brought in a stretcher and he was placed on that and carried out. I then went to the front of the box and motioned for the audience to remain quiet. Every one was talking, and there was a general uproar. As soon as it ceased for a minute I told them that the President was still alive, but had been shot, and was no doubt mortally wounded. Captain Owens and I then went out to the front of the building and found a platoon of police in the street. The sidewalks were so crowded with people that we had to get out in the middle of the road to get down the street. We went to the National Hotel, and by the time we got there the mob was so dense we could get no further, so a couple of police took us through the hotel to C street, at the rear, and we got a cab and were driven to the navy yard. I was so bloody from the wound, my right hand and arm being covered, that it is a wonder that I was not hanged by that mob. They were intensely excited at the time, and it would have taken very little to have driven them into a frenzy.

"The next day our ship went down the river to head Booth off, and did not return until after he was killed. I was then sent for to go down and identify him. I recognized him very readily as he jumped from the box as J. Wilkes Booth."

Talleyrand never was in love but once, and that was when he was about 16 years old. When Napoleon ordered him to marry and picked out a wife for him, he pleaded this youthful attachment, which was immediately scoffed at by the great match-maker as a piece of nonsense.

LITTLE DRINKING IN CONGRESS.

The Facts as Observed by the Former Manager of the Capitol Restaurant.

"Even though the Morse bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in the National capitol should become a law," said Thomas J. Murrey, formerly manager of the restaurant in the House of Representatives in Washington, "very little hardship would be experienced by the members of Congress. As a matter of fact, the only sufferers would be a very few bibulous officials, the visitors and the loungers in or members of the third house.

"The perennial agitation of the Congressional liquor question and the many false reports about the closing scenes in Congress have caused a great many people to imagine that the average National statesman is a hard drinker. My four years in the capitol, as proprietor of the restaurant in the House of Representatives, gave me excellent opportunities for studying the social and convivial side of Congressional life, and I can truthfully state that all the stories about Congressmen being hard drinkers are absolutely false.

"It stands to reason that among a body of 356 men from all over the Union, there should be a few who drank to excess. It is likely to surprise most readers of daily papers to learn, however, that the hard drinkers never numbered more than five during my four years' observations. This is the more remarkable when we take into consideration the many invitations and the temptations to drink to which Congressmen are subjected. The number of steady drinkers who indulged in from two to four drinks a day, and never showed the effects of what they drank, numbered rarely more than fifty. When there were night sessions, or prolonged exciting debates, a much larger number of members would on such occasions use stimulants, but they did not make a daily practice of doing so.

"Notwithstanding that the Morse bill passed the House by a vote of 104 to 7, I believe that there will always be liquor sold at the capitol, and the care with which the average Congressman looks after his reputation will always hold in check any tippling proclivities he may bring to Congress with him.

The closing hours of the Fifty-third Congress have been pictured by a number of space writers as being a most debasing scene; in fact, a saturnalia. Notwithstanding the intense excitement, and the long day and night session, there were only two members of Congress who could be classed under the head of drunk, and they did not get their liquor in the restaurant, but in committee rooms. Thinking that the restaurant would be closed on that memorable Sunday, March 3, 1895, parties interested in various pet measures stocked certain committee rooms with liquor and food. These being free, the hangers-on proceeded to load up quite extensively, the result being that there were a number of people seen at the capitol under the influence of liquor. These people were not allowed in the restaurant by the police stationed at the doors, but they kicked up a great deal of noise and one or two rows, causing strangers to imagine they were of some importance, and might be Congressmen.

"A lived-up-to rule preventing strangers from the privileges of the restaurant, unless accompanied by members, would quickly put an end to all these stories about bibulous Congressmen.

"Mr. Morse cannot be blamed very much for introducing the bill prohibiting the sale of liquor in the capitol, for he has suffered personally from the bacchanalian habits of one member. Mr. Morse went to Speaker Reed and bitterly complained that he was unable to get his committee to meet or act owing to the condition of the chairman. The Speaker told him that, should the committee be again called together for a business meeting, and the chairman fail to appear, he (Morse) should take the chair, call the committee to order, and continue as chairman of the committee."—New York Sun.

Parliamentary Amenities.

In Michigan, some years ago, a bill was before the Legislature to restore the death penalty for the crime of murder. Three of the ablest members of the House made long speeches in favor of the bill—so long as to be found wearisome, especially by those who disagreed with the opinions expressed. When the third man had finished, a young member on the other side of the chamber rose and said, very sarcastically:

"Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege."

"The gentleman will state his question of privilege," said the Speaker.

"Mr. Speaker, I wish to inquire of our friends of the other side of the house which they think is preferable—to be hanged or to be talked to death?"

The question was greeted with applause. Then suddenly some one with a very loud voice said:

"Oh, well, if you're going to talk, we prefer to be hanged."

Storing Hay Racks in Winter.

Owing to their great size inconvenience is often felt in caring for hay racks in winter. The difficulty in storing them often leads farmers to leave them out of doors all winter, which is most unfortunate. The accompanying diagram shows how a rack cannot only be stored without inconvenience, but may be made to do duty during the winter. It is raised to the great beams over the feeding floor of the barn and secured in the manner shown in the sketch, and while in this position it is utilized as storage room for any fodder, like straw, pea or bean vines, etc., that may be threshed out during the winter. It is raised by a tackle and fall, and is lowered in the same way, directly upon its gear, when wanted the following season.—Exchange.

Experiments on Every Farm.

Most farm work is experimental. There are a few ruts which all farmers get into, but aside from these almost everything the farmer does is so subject to varying conditions that its result cannot be surely forecasted. For his own protection the farmer is obliged to try both early and late seeding. Sometimes one and sometimes the other will produce the best results. Thus each year every farmer must be accumulating new facts to modify his previous conclusions. They are, too, facts that are generally used appreciatingly, for they are reasoned about by men who know that their success depends on making use of what their dealing with nature has taught them. Yet none the less such farmers read with interest of experiments made on farms devoted exclusively for such purposes, and which, being supported by the State, can make experiments that are impossible for average farmers.—American Cultivator.

Calves and Young Stock.

They thrive best when given plenty of exercise. Keep the calves and yearlings separate. Give each calf daily one quart of oat chop and one quart of millfeed. Yearlings should have two quarts of millfeed and one quart of oat chop. Give the grain dry, and give plenty of long fodder, rough hay and straw. Keep them growing, and let them eat plenty of rough feed to distend their paunches. Our aim should be to raise large-sized, healthy cows, with big appetites and a vigorous digestion. Small, delicate cows, however beautiful they may be, are seldom profitable.

Soil Injured by Trampling.

There is no time of year when injury may not be done to soil by having stock run over it. But there is greater danger of this in moist, open weather in winter than at any other time in the year. There is nothing for stock to get at this season by roaming over the fields, even if they are bare of snow. The poaching which pasture and meadow lands get by being trampled in late fall or open spells during the winter destroys much grass. It is not much if any better when the field has to be plowed in spring. The soil will turn up full of clods made by the poaching, and it will take a great deal of extra cultivation to make the plowed surface into a seed bed fit for any hoed crop.

Removing Posts Made Easy.

The illustration below is almost self-explanatory, but a scheme that but seldom occurs to a person who wishes to move posts. One man drives the pick, B, into the post, A, and braces against the crowbar, D, which is worked over the fulcrum, C, by his companion.—Farm and Home.

EASY WAY OF PULLING POSTS.

Begin with Good Stock.

Most of those who begin farming buy more land than they can pay for, because a part payment on land leaves good security for the balance. Then they find innumerable expenses in purchasing tools and stock to begin operations. The temptation always is to economize in the stock, thinking that it is easy to breed up. Sometimes this is done, but more often the economy in not buying the best stock dooms the farmer to the same labor and expense in caring for it, while it is, when grown, not worth half or a quarter what it would have been if he had begun right at first.

Winter Plowing.

The action of the frost is very beneficial to the farmer, for the hard clods are broken to pieces by the expansion of the contained water when it freezes. The earth is pulverized and put in good condition for receiving seed. Hence it is beneficial to plow the fields in the fall, so that the winter frosts may act upon the hard pieces of earth. In this way much labor is saved, and the natural forces do better work than could be accomplished by artificial means. A further advantage is gained from the action of air on the exposed soil.—Popular Science Monthly.

New Way to Kill Potato Bugs.

Application of poison to the seed potato is the latest scheme for killing the bugs. A potato is cut into four parts; dip them into a solution of paris green and hellebore, and place the pieces over every alternate hill soon after the potato plants have gotten well started. The old beetle will, it is claimed, always leave the tops for the potato, and hence will not live to produce eggs.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Valuable Horses.

On the last day of a horse fair recently, some very queer-looking horses were still left unsold. A buyer purchased one, after much bargaining, for $13, and then asked the owner if he would not return the odd dollar just for luck; whereupon, the owner refused, but added: "Here, I won't be hard; take another hoss, instead!"

Pigmy Swine.

The smallest known species of pig is the pigmy swine of Australia. They are exactly like their larger brethren in every particular, except size, being not larger than a good-sized house rat.

Horticultural Notes.

A superfluous branch is a needless drain upon the resources of a tree.

In pruning the grape, allow five canes or vines to each post, cutting back every year.

Burn all the wood cut out of black and red raspberries, so as to destroy the eggs of insects.

All apples keep best in a temperature pretty near freezing, and particularly in an even temperature.

Put up a number of small boxes in the trees in the orchard especially for the martins and wrens.

It is claimed that with the peach a Southern slope will yield earlier, richer and better flavored fruit, but there is an increased risk of loss from late frosts.

FRIDAY, MAR 26 1897

Actually a resolution was introduced into the legislature of the enlightened state of Missouri asking that a committee of five members be appointed to attend the prize fight in Nevada and report on its amenities, with a view of ultimately legalizing such fights in Missouri. Is the world moving backward?

A new game called the "Editor's Delight" is played in this way says an exchange. Take a sheet of ordinary writing paper, fold it carefully, and inclose a bank note sufficiently large to pay up all arrearages and one year in advance. Keep an eye on the editor, and if a smile adorns his face the trick works like a charm. This is about the season of the year when this game can be most appropriately played.

The rebellion in Cuba drags itself along from week to week without difinite progress on either side. The principal event of the past week was the wrecking of an armed Spanish train by the insurgents, who killed 250 Spanish soldiers and captured 300 more, including ten officers. The wreck was caused by dynamite explosions and was the work of a young American engineer in the service of the Patriot army. It was reported early in the week that General Weyler had been instructed by his government to offer Cuba to the insurgents for a money price, and that he had gone to the interior to seek a personal interview with General Gomez. There is however, no confirmation of this report.

The diplomatic deatils of the Greek and Cretan troubles occupy many columns in the daily papers each morning, but they are hardly worth the reading, since the affair can have but one ending. The powers of Europe are not able at this time, any more than at any other time for fifty years past, to dispose amicably of the several parts of the Turkish empire; therefore, they have determined for the present that this empire shall be held together, no matter at what cost of hardship and injustice to the Christian populations who occupy them. Crete is a Turkish province; if Crete is dismembered from Turkey, it will open the way for other and similar loppings off; therefore, in one form or another, Crete will be compelled to submit to continued Turkish control. The powers have declared that Greece shall not annex Crete, and the Greek government has been so informed. All talk of Greek resistance to this order is so much balderdash, designed by the Greek ministers for political consumption in their own country. The idea of Greece, a petty and poverty-stricken country, seriously opposing the great powers of Europe, is manifestly absurd. The sympathies of Christian Europe are naturally with the Christians of Crete, and as a concession to this universal sentiment, Crete will probably be made practically independent of Turkey.

The King is dead! Long live the King! Two plug-uglies who have been making pugilistic faces at each other for the past five years have thumped each other for an hour and until one of them, as a result of the thumping, by being unable to continue thumping for ten consecutive seconds, was held to have forfeited to the other a mythical thing called the championship. The whole transaction is a disgrace to our nationality and our civilization, and that, too, not merely on account of its inherent brutality but also because of the shameful and tiresome prominence which has been given to it. It is not necessary in this connection to discuss the question of whether prize fighting is in itself a degrading and brutalizing sport, because it is not necessary to take a very austere view of life in order to see that, apart from the question of whether this sport is brutal in itself, its necessary tendency, as it is now conducted, is to exercise a vicious and degrading influence upon the general community by elevating into heroes and heroines men and women who belong really to the disreputable elements of society. Men and women who are stamped all over with the indelible brand of the tenderloin do not form a healthful or wholeaome object lesson to hold before the rising generation or before the rougher elements of society. The prize fighter and his patrons are bad enough when they sneak off, as they used to in the olden times, to some secluded spot and settle their disputes as to who are the strongest and most enduring human brutes; but when they undertake to run the country, when laws are made and unmade in their behalf, when Boards of Supervisors undertake to license breaches of the state law at their behest, when the police force of a great community becomes their servitor in aiding them to break the law, when a Justice of the Supreme Court so far forgets the noblesse oblige of his station as to appear at an exhibition of this kind, when doctors, merchants, lawyers and other leaders of reputable society crowd shamelessly in among loafers and gamblers and maquereaux and shoulder strikers and miscellaneous ruffians in order to see a "scrap" and when the daily press surrenders not merely columns but pages of its space for months at a time recording and illustrating the doings and sayings of two blackguards whose only title to distinction is that they are superior to most men and inferior to a mule in regard to the strength of the blow they can strike, I think that the time and place has come for a halt to be called. Prize fighting, like the social evil and gambling and similar amusements, may be tolerated in a small and obscure way, as necessary outlets for the imperfections of human nature, but they should not be allowed to dominate and rule organized society.—Town Talk.

The reason that Corbett was defeated was because he had "Fitz" in the ring.

A. F. Mairs returned from the Saline valley copper mines on Wednesday last.

Miss Ida Adams and Mrs. Joseph Halliday were up from Lone Pine yesterday.

The addition being made to Mr. J. R. Moffett's residence is rapidly nearing completion.

Harry Cook returned on Tuesday last from a five month's sojourn in the mines of southern Inyo.

Mrs. A. A. Niel and little son, of Aberdeen, were visitors at Independence on Wednesday last.

The Reward Mining Co., shipped a car load of concentrates to San Francisco during the week.

Tom Gunn came in from the Minnietta mine on Saturday last and is spending a few days in this section.

P. W. Keys came in from Beveridge last Saturday. He says his mine is looking well and that he employs four men.

Schober's big team passed through town this morning en route to Mojave for a load of freight for our valley merchants.

Harry Burt says the prize fight at Carson was a success, but the turn-up poker game which he engaged in had the semblance of being somewhat crooked.

Quite a number of the youths of our village are emulating Fitzsimmons in his knock-out blow. It is almost of daily occurrence that we hear of the youngsters wagering marbles as to who will draw first blood.

The Utah Legislature has before it a a mining bill providing that locators shall put monuments at each corner of a claim and that within ninety days from the date of the location notice work to the value of $100 must be done.

J. J. Gunn, J. C. Irwin, Henry Levy, J. C. Miller and Harry Burt returned from Carson last Friday night. All say they had a good time and got the worth of their money. All kinds of gambling devices were in evidence and the unwary met with pecuniary loss.

The true standing of an editor is appreciated after his death if not before. A lawyer sent the following words of consolation to the widow of an editor. "I cannot tell you how pained I was to hear that your husband had gone to heaven. We were bosom friends, but can never meet again."

Ernest Laird has creditably passed his examination before the Bar of the Superior Court and has been appointed Official Reporter for Inyo county. Ernest was born and raised in this county and deserves great credit for his untiring work and energy in perfecting himself in his chosen profession.

John Ramsay met with a severe accident at the Reward mill a few days ago. While attempting to oil some machinery his shirt sleeve got entangled between a pulley and belt, drawing in his arm, lacerating and straining it badly before the machinery was stopped. He came to Independence Saturday for medical treatment. The injured member is doing nicely and Johnny will soon be able to return to work.

Last Friday evening Mamie Hession gave a birthday party, to which all her schoolmates and the children of the town were invited. Games of all kinds for the smaller children and dancing for the older ones were indulged in and greatly enjoyed. A sumptuous supper was served and all expressed themselves as having had a splendid time, and if the wishes of her young friends could accomplish it, Mamie would have a birthday at least once a week.

The Care of Plants and Shrubs.

Besides washes, there are some remedies, which may be applied in powder form, and these may be applied with a powder bellows or by means of a thin muslin sack containing the powder. These powders are finely powdered tobacco, or snuff, buhach and sulphur, and to the sulphur may be added to good advantage some very fine wood ashes.

The tobacco and buhach are for insects, and a trial or two will teach you more about the ones which will succumb to these influences than a whole page of directions. Sulphur should be applied quite freely about any plants which are inclined to mildew or mold, or which have any indications of any specific fungus. Sulphur applied on the ground under plants has an effect as soon as hot, sunny days come, and it is a fact that sulphur has only a partial effect in cool weather.

The other remedies for molds, mildews and fungus and of this nature are all of the so-called blights of plants such as the blights of the carnation and the rose, are the Bordeau mixture and the Eau celeste, receipts of which can be readily obtained.

You can easily reduce the proportions to smaller quantities. Use the Bordeau mixture if you are not afraid of temporarily disfiguring foliage by a sort of whitewashy look. Eau celeste does not show very much on green foliage.

Of the sprays for insecticides there is whale oil soap, which can be used at a strength of one pound to four gallons of hot water on shrubs and small trees and a little weaker on plants.

Kerosene emulsion is easily made and is an admirable insecticide. One part of emulsion to ten of water is a strong spray and fifteen gallons of water is a very good spray for most insects.

Either of these applied several times during the season will keep down scale insects, except the cottony cushion scale. —Pacific Tree and Vine.

Scholarship for the Deserving.

The following is a copy of a letter from W. C. Ramsey, of the Stockton Business College to S. W. Austin, Secy. Board of Education, offering a scholarship in that college, good for six months, in any department, to the most deserving pupil of our public schools.

"In view of the hard times and as a stimulus for better work in the public schools in your county, I have a proposition to make to you: I will give free to the County Board of Education of your county a scholarship in the Stockton Business College, good for six months, in any department of the school, to be given by them to the one deserving it.

"My plan is this: Your county will soon hold its annual examination of graduation and I wish to offer through your Board a scholarship as stated, to the school receiving the highest average percentage in such examination.

"In this way each school will have a chance as it will make no difference whether one or twenty enter, for it is the highest average. In case there is a tie, give it to the school having the highest daily attendance of the number belonging. Then to the school receiving the scholarship allow them to choose one of their number by ballot, who shall be benefited. The teacher shall have no vote except in case of a tie.

"In this way you will encourage good scholarship, punctuality, and courteous behavior, all valuable habits.

"If your Board has some other better plan to give out the scholarship, I shall be pleased to hear from you."

The scholarship is worth $65, and should act as a great incentive to the graduating pupils to strive to get this worthy prize.

Again in Luck.

Through the kindness of Judge Gill we are allowed to extract from a letter an item that will be of interest to many of our readers and old-timers, who will be pleased to learn of the good fortune of Joseph Diaz, one of the pioneers of this county and one of the original discoverers of Cerro Gordo. Joe is located at a place called Trimmer Springs, Cal., and relates the following of his new find:

"I will say that we have quite a young bonanza. The mine is about 250 feet in width and situated near Trimmer Springs on Kings river. The country has lain here and no notice taken of it until I discovered the Good Luck lead. I gave Mr. Charley Bowers a half interest in it. Now the whole country is alive with prospectors and locators. We have now bonded the mine to a San Francisco company for six months for $60,000, and they will commence operations in a few days. We only bonded our mine a few days ago, but since that time there has been several men in here representing capital. I have located another mine on the S. D. Demasters lead, which is over 200 feet in width and I think is a No. 1 mine."

Mr. Diaz says he is in good health considering his age and contemplates making a visit to Inyo later in the year.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following transfers of real estate were recorded during the week ending March 26th:

Henry Morse to J. J. Arbois—¼ interest in the Black Monster and ⅓ interest in the Summit quartz mines, Butte mining district—$150.

W. A. Platt to N. Kamp and A. Anderson—Mountain Chief mining claim, Argus range district—$1.

C. J. Stone and R. A. Dunkerton to C. L. Fisher—⅓ interest in Bluebird, Alice, and ⅓ interest in Gipsey Queen mining claims, Argus district—$150.

Catherine De La Matyr to Abram Banta—160 acres land near Bishop—$2,600.

Juan Frujillo, Justo Silastia and Ygnacio Castiana to S. F. Kelley—¼ interest in the Santa Rita mining claim—$50.

John Alexander, Commissioner, to A. J. Church—Land near Big Pine—$1,500.

What Docking Is.

Not every one knows just what docking is. It is not merely cutting off the hair of the tail the length of the solid part—the late humane convention has not asked prohibition of that, though well it might—but it is amputating the solid part of the tail for some length and tying up the stump with a rope running through a pulley overhead, with a weight attached to the free end of the rope to keep the tail elevated. Then the under portions of the solid part of the stump are incised with sharp knives and some of the smaller cords severed. The wounds are kept open with the tail thus trained aloft, so that as they heal they will fill with flesh, and thus, when after a long period, the animal is released, he cannot put his stump of a tail down if he would. He is then a nobby cab and fit for the sports of "sassiety."—Record-Union.

The Largest Ocean Steamer.

It is announced that the White Star Line has ordered a new steamer for its line between Liverpool and New York. It will be named the Oceanic, after the pioneer vessel of the company, and when launched will be the longest vessel afloat, the length being 25 ft. longer than the Great Eastern, hitherto the longest vessel ever built, and 65 ft. longer than any vessel now afloat or in process of construction. It will be 103 ft. longer than the Lucania and Campania, the crack steamships of the Cunard Line, and 139 ft. longer than the Majestic and Teutonic, the present express steamers of the White Star Line. The gross tonnage of the new ship will be 17,000 tons. No attempt will be made to give the vessel high speed.

Dangers of the Grip.

The greatest danger from La Grippe is of its resulting in pneumonia. If reasonable care is used, however, and Chamberlain's Cough remedy taken, all danger will be avoided. Among the tens of thousands who have used this remedy for la grippe, we have yet to learn of a single case having resulted in pneumonia, which shows conclusively that this remedy is a certain preventive of this dread disease. It will effect a permanent cure in less time than any other treatment. The 25 and 50 cent sizes for sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

From Cripple Creek.

After the big fire in Cripple Creek I took a severe cold and tried many remedies without help, the cold only becoming more settled. After using three small bottles of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, both the cough and cold left me, and in this high altitude it takes a meritorious cough remedy to do any good.—G. B. Henderson, editor Daily Advertiser. For sale by N. Rhine, Druggist.

Spray Pumps.

Mr. C. A. Walter, of Camp Independence, agent for the Lewis spray pump will soon receive a shipment of these noted insect destroyers. There are at present over fifty of these pumps in the valley. They are durable, cheap and have given entire satisfaction where a trial has been given. Orders solicited,

THE SEARCHER.

The searcher after truth is generally rewarded, although it is said that "Truth lies at the bottom of a well." We need something when we are afflicted with neuralgia to search out the seat of the pain, or the pain spot, and as St. Jacob Oil's mission for good is to penetrate and search out the hidden misery, it goes through like an "X" ray, and conquers and subdues the pain All pain trouble of a nervous nature needs careful treatment and patience. The afflicted nerves must be soothed into submission, and stimulated into healthful action, so as to restore. This is the virtue of the great remedy for pain, and it is, therefore, well known as the best. It may be called the searcher after the truth of our bodily ailments.

Stranger—Is your city water healthy? Native—Yes; it seems to be tolerably well supplied with animal spirits.

Beware Of the Knife.

Mr. Lincoln Nelson, of Marshfield, Mo., writes: "For six years I have been a sufferer from a scrofulous affection of the glands of my neck, and all efforts of physicians in Washington, D. C., Springfield, Ill., and St. Louis failed to reduce the enlargement. After six months' constant treatment here, my physician urged me to submit to a removal of the gland. At this critical moment a friend recommended S.S.S., and laying aside a deep-rooted prejudice against all patent medicines, I began its use. Before I had used one bottle the enlargement began to disappear, and now it is entirely gone, though I am not through with my second bottle yet. Had I only used your S.S.S. long ago, I would have escaped years of misery and saved over $150."

This experience is like that of all who suffer with deep-seated blood troubles. The doctors can do no good, and even their resorts to the knife prove either fruitless or fatal. S.S.S. is the only real blood remedy; it gets at the root of the disease and forces it out permanently.

VIBRATING IN TUNEFUL ACCORD.

Like the strings of a musical instrument, the nervous system in health harmonizes pleasantly with the other parts of the system. But weakened or overwrought, it jangles most inharmoniously. Quiet and invigorate it with the great tranquilizer and tonic, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which promotes digestion, bilious secretion and a regular action of the bowels, and prevents malarial, rheumatic and kidney complaints.

"Don't you think it would encourage men if they could read their obituaries while they are alive?" "No; they would get so conceited that we couldn't live with them."

All ailments arising from a disordered stomach, torpid liver and constipated bowels are quickly cured by using Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters.

THOSE who wish to employ the services of a Detective, and who is known as to his secrecy and his ability and his success in business for the past twenty years, and who works for the interest of his clients, will find it to their advantage to place their business in Mr. A. E. Lucas' hands, whose office is in the Parrott Bldg, (over the Emporium) 825-835 Market St., San Francisco.

Mr. Lucas does not publish his business in the newspapers, nor does he look after newspaper notoriety in giving his secret work to the press as he deems it a detriment to any Detective to give out any of the secrets of his clients, being immaterial to the public, unless the case is brought out in the courts; and numerous of his cases, which has been handled by him, being brought to a successful termination, nothing has been heard of them, thereby avoiding a trial by the courts.

We would recommend Mr. Lucas to anyone who is desirous of having secret work done, and are satisfied that if anyone employs him, they will not have any reason to regret it, having handled some of the most difficult cases, both civil and criminal which has ever been known on this coast, for banks and private parties.

Mr. Lucas has competent and reliable agents throughout the United States and Canada, which enables him to transact business for his clients at a reasonable rate, thereby saving traveling expenses.

Lash's Kidney and Liver Bitters searches out all impurities and expels them harmlessly through the natural channels from the system.

Little Courtesy Among Travelers.

"I am sorry to have to say it," remarked a sleeping car conductor, "but somehow—and I have no explanation for it—men traveling are not as courteous and accommodating to lady travelers as they should be. The men who ask for all kinds of accommodations, when they have their wives, sisters or female relatives traveling with them—and they never fail then to claim everything in sight—are in many cases the men who decline to give similar favors to other lady passengers. As a matter of fact the upper berths in a sleeping car are the best, the best ventilated, and I think experience has shown the safest in cases of wreck. Still, the demand is nearly always for the lower berths, because it is easier to get into them. This is particularly so with lady travelers. In my last half dozen trips from and back to this city I have had more than the usual percentage of lady passengers, and I have not succeeded in one case in getting any of the men travelers to surrender a lower berth for an upper berth. The men, being more experienced, secured the lower berths and refused to give them up."—Washington Star.

A Bird That Shaves Itself.

The lammergeyer, or bearded vulture, found throughout the whole mountain chains of the old world, actually shaves himself. The expert barber, who has for his customers crusty millionaires, could not ply the keen edged razor to the stubby beard of his particular patron more deftly than the monarch of the mountain tops prunes his own bristly beard.

The head of the vulture is clothed with feathers, and from the sides of the under mandible proceeds a row of black bristles. From this peculiar projection of feathers the bird derives his name. A layer of similar bristles begins at the eye and covers the nostrils, forming a fleecy mustache.

With his strong and sharp claws, which act as the razor, he begins to trim his fibrous whiskers with great care and dexterity. He does this with great regularity, and soon the downy beard and mustache give way to a full growth of bristly feathers.—San Francisco Examiner.

TO A SKELETON.

(The following verses were published anonymously in the London Morning Chronicle in 1827. Notwithstanding the offer of a reward of fifty guineas, the author's name has remained a secret until nearly sixty years had passed, when it was learned that the lines were written by Robert Philip, of Gormyre Cottage, Scotland. Toward the end of the year 1826 he wrote the verses while watching for body snatchers in the parish churchyard of Torphichen, where, during the repairing of the church, the unearthing of a skeleton suggested the subject. The verses were shown to Dr. John Alford, who procured a copy, and either by accident or intention dropped a copy in the Royal College of Surgeons, where they were found.)

Behold this ruin! 'Twas a skull
Once of ethereal spirit full;
This narrow cell was life's retreat,
This space was thought's mysterious seat.
What beauteous visions filled this spot,
What dreams of pleasure long forgot!
Nor love, nor joy, nor hope, nor fear
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this moldering canopy
Once shone the bright and busy eye.
But start not at the dismal void!
If social love that eye employed,
If with no lawless fire it gleamed,
But, through the dews of kindness beamed,
That eye shall be forever bright,
When stars and suns are sunk in night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift, and tuneful tongue.
If falsehood's honey it disdained,
And where it could not praise was chained,
If bold in virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke,
That silent tongue shall plead for thee
When time unveils eternity.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine,
Or with its envied rubies shine?
To hew the rock or wear the gem
Can little now avail to them;
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
These hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that waits on wealth or fame.

Avails it whether bare or shod
These feet the paths of duty trod?
If from the bowers of ease they fled
To seek affection's humble shed;
If grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to virtue's cot returned,
These feet with angels' wings shall vie
And tread the palace of the sky.

THE MAHOGANY SETTLE.

Mrs. Oakley—bless her kind heart!—was not of a jealous nature. It does not behoove a minister's wife to be jealous; but the dinner was already on the table—a well-browned roast chicken, with bread sauce, and a baked Indian pudding to follow—and it was undoubtedly a relief when her husband came out of the study and seated himself.

"Was that Miss Penriff?" said she.

"Yes," Mr. Oakley answered, "it was Miss Penriff. She wants to sell her old mahogany settle."

"What!" cried Mrs. Oakley, "that delightful old settle, with the griffin's bumpy heads at the top and the claw feet at the bottom? I didn't know that anything would induce her to part with that."

And then Mr. Oakley pronounced the blessing.

"I wish I could afford to buy it!" added Mrs. Oakley, tucking a bib-apron under the youngest Oakley's plump chin. "What did you tell her, Simeon?"

"Why, I told her, I'd write to that big antique-buying firm in New York," said Oakley. "They're the only people who can deal with her to any advantage. A big hall-settle like that is only appropriate for big houses, with wide entrances, such as, according to all reports, that poor, desolate old maid once lived in. And big houses are mostly found in big cities."

"Poor thing!" said Mrs. Oakley. And she helped her husband to some applesauce.

While Keziah Penriff went slowly home to the old red house under the hill, where Dolly was making tomato catsup in the kitchen.

"Well, Dorothy," said she, "I've done it."

"Done what, Aunt Kizzy?"

"I've sold the old hall-settle."

Dolly looked up from the scarlet steam of the tomatoes to the cool hall opposite, where the griffin's wooden eye seemed to leer at her out of the shadows, and one carved and shining claw was poised on the floor, as if about to take a forward step.

"Oh, Aunt Kizzy!" said she.

"Yes, I know," sighed the elder woman. "But there's got to be an end to everything, Dolly. I'm a poor woman now, and can't afford to hold on to luxurious that are nothing but luxuries."

"But," gasped Dolly, stirring away with spasmodic vigor at the tomatoes, "Grandfather Penriff brought that settle from Holland himself, and it's two hundred years old! And it's the last relic of the old house on the hill!"

"Still," reasoned Miss Penriff, looking away over the blue Indian summer haze toward the yellowing forests, "I've no right to keep it, Dolly. It's been almost a matter of idolatry with me, and perhaps I'd better let it go. We are poor, Dolly—very poor!"

"It's no disgrace," said she, with a comical grimace. "But it's most uncommonly inconvenient."

"If you feel that way, Dorothy," said Miss Penriff, "I don't see why you refused Orlando Dailey last week."

"Why," said Dolly, opening her blue eyes very wide, "because I didn't love him!"

"He's very rich, Dorothy."

"He's welcome to his money, Aunt Kizzy."

"My goodness me," said Miss Penriff, putting on her spectacles (alas! what a trial to her pride that the first pair of steel-rimmed spectacles had been!) "who's that driving down the road in a covered cart?"

Dolly stepped back into the shadow.

"I don't know," said she, "but—I—think it's Johnny Barton."

"Oh!" said Miss Penriff. "Has that young man gone into the express business?"

"Not exactly," said Dolly, busying herself among the tomato jars. "But I think he drives around picking up old china and brass fire-dogs, and all such things for some big collector in New York."

"I don't doubt it," said Miss Penriff. "But I wonder what he wants here?"

The little discussion was terminated by the sudden tapping of Johnny Barton's whip-handle against the side of the open door

Yes, he was a very nice young man—blue-eyed and frank-faced, with yellow hair curling away from his temples, and white teeth which shone every time he smiled.

He had only been in Rodendale a few weeks. Miss Penriff had seen him now and then, but she hardly remembered him.

"How do you do, Miss Penriff?" said he, with stupendous self-possession.

"Mr. Barton, aunt," said Dolly, in a hurried sort of way. "This is my aunt, Miss Penriff, Johnny."

"I don't know, what has procured me the honor of this call," said Miss Penriff, straightening herself up.

For she never could forget, this poor, faded, elderly woman, that her father, Squire Peregrin Penriff, had once been the richest man in the county.

"Well, I don't know much about the honor of the thing," said John Barton, laughing. "But I've just heard from Mr. Oakley that you wanted to sell an old carved settle. I'm buying up that sort of thing."

"Oh, indeed?"

"Perhaps you would allow me to look at it?" went on Johnny, resolved on business.

Dolly flung open the hall window that was generally kept closed and curtained. A blaze of yellow sunlight flooded the hall, a gust of sweet, autumn, leaf-scented air came in and the carved griffins seemed to wink their wooden satisfaction.

"There!" cried Dolly. "Isn't it a beauty? And heavy—oh, what a piece of solid heaviness! Oh, that isn't a secret drawer! It's only a place to put umbrellas and canes in. I used to be certain there was a secret drawer in it when I was a child. But I've changed my mind now."

John Barton walked slowly around the settle, eying it from every point of view. Miss Penriff watched him.

"Yes, it is a beauty!" said he. "What will you take for it, Miss Penriff?"

"I hardly think you can afford to buy it, young man," said the elderly lady, grimly.

John Barton reddened a little.

"Oh, as for that," said he, rather awkwardly, "I'm representing some one else. Personally, perhaps——"

"Well," said Miss Penriff, "it cost three hundred dollars. But I don't expect to get its full value."

"Aunt Keziah would take a hundred," fluttered Dolly, "if——"

"Very well," said Mr. Barton, "it's a bargain. Is there a man about the place who could help me lift it into the wagon?"

"There's old Silas Wiggins beyond the big rock," suggested Dolly.

And while Johnny Barton was gone for him, the old lady sat down on the settle, where the yellow sunshine glimmered and the smell of late mignonnette came in at the window.

"Here was where I used to sit," said she. "There was a big stained glass window in the hall just over it, and a great fireplace beyond, where they burned such big black logs of cold, winter nights. And there, in the other corner, my lover used to sit."

Her voice quivered; a tear sparkled in the faded blue eyes behind the steel-rimmed spectacles.

"Oh, Aunt Keziah!" cried Dolly, suddenly flinging her arms around the old lady's neck. "I never knew you had a lover."

"Does any woman ever live to be 20 without a lover, child?" said Miss Penriff. "But your grandfather was a very ambitious man. He was losing money in those South Sea shipping ventures even then, though I didn't know it—and he wanted me to marry a rich man and retrieve the family fortunes. And Henry was poor."

"Was that his name, Aunt Keziah?"

"So I never married at all," went on Miss Penriff. "Good-by, old settle!"

And, with infinite pathos, she touched her lips lightly to the biggest of the griffin's heads.

But Dolly held tight to her aunt's hand; she clung around her neck with passionate kisses.

"Now you know, Aunt Keziah," said she, almost in a sob, "why I didn't accept Orlando Dailey. Now you know why I love Johnny Barton. Johnny isn't rich, but neither was your Henry. Oh, Aunt Keziah, you won't blame me!"

"Dear me!" said Miss Penriff, in a sort of bewildered way. "You don't mean to say——"

"Yes, I do," said Dolly, turning pink and white, like the tall hollyhocks at the garden gate. "It was only last night when we walked home from the prayer meeting together. I couldn't think of what Elder Johnson was saying because of John's blue eyes, and it all seemed like a dream to me, until he asked me to try and love him a little."

"And do you love him, Dorothy?"

"I'd ride around the whole world with him in that old covered cart, if you only say yes," sobbed the girl. "I don't care for money or rank. I only know that I love John!"

And she slipped back into the shadows as Johnny Barton and old Silas Wiggins came to lift out the mahogany settle.

Miss Penriff watched them through a mist of tears.

Here was the blossoming out of truth and love, and all that blessed disregard of ways and means that only comes in the dawn of life. She had outgrown it all, but it was a story that repeated itself with each new generation.

She remembered that Mr. Oakley had said that John Barton was a good fellow enough. She looked at the old settle where she and Henry Hartford had sat years ago, and she beckoned softly to Dolly.

"Dorothy," said she, "if you love the lad, take him. I—I was young once!"

And then she went back into the house, so that she might not see the old griffins, with the claw feet, being carried away.

Only two weeks afterward Dolly came eagerly to her aunt.

"John's uncle is coming down from New York," said she, "the gentleman who bought the mahogany settle. It wasn't for a store, Aunt Keziah, that John bought it. It was for his own house. He's very rich, and John is his only heir. And he liked my photograph, and he's coming to see you tonight. Doesn't it sound exactly like a story-paper?" faltered happy Dolly. "Who's that knocking at the door? It can't be John's uncle already!"

Miss Penriff's drawn face had brightened into sudden radiance.

"It's Henry!" said she, with a start.

Dolly looked half frightened, but at the same moment the door opened and John Barton came in with another gentleman, gray and portly.

"He arrived by the 4 o'clock train, Dolly," said he. "And only think he used to know your aunt a quarter of a century ago."

"Henry!" faltered Miss Penriff, gazing at the stranger, in utter bewilderment.

"Keziah!"

To the young people, full of the ineffable arrogance of youth, it was the meeting of two gray, wrinkled old people. To Henry Hartford and Keziah Penriff, time had gone backward, and they stood, radiantly happy, on the threshold of long ago.

"Keziah, why did you not tell me where you were?"

"Henry, why did you not say something to let me know you cared for me still?"

The next day all Rodendale was convulsed with the news that there was to be a double wedding in the place.

"As for Johnny Barton and pretty Dorothy Hall, it's all right and proper enough," said the voice of popular opinion. "But for old people like Miss Penriff and that fat New York millionaire—well, no one can set limits to the ridiculous!"

But how was popular opinion to know, that to all intents and purposes, Uncle Henry and Aunt Kizzy had been dipped in the waters of the fountain of youth?

John and Dorothy might go to Richmond on their wedding trip, but was it not happiness enough for their elders to sit side by side on the old mahogany settle once more?—Waverly Magazine.

A Great Hunting Outfit.

The Emperor hath two Barons who are own brothers, one called Baian, and the other Mingan; and these two are styled Chinuchi (or Chinichi), which is as much as to say, "The Keepers of the Mastiff Dogs." Each of these brothers hath 10,000 men under his orders; each body of 10,000 being dressed alike, the one in red and the other in blue, and whenever they accompany the Khan to the chase they wear this livery, in order to be recognized. Out of each body of 10,000 there are 2,000 men who are each in charge of one or more great mastiffs, so that the whole number of these is very large. And when the Prince goes a-hunting, one of these Barons, with his 10,000 men and something like 5,000 dogs, goes towards the right, while the other goes towards the left with his party in like manner. They move along, all abreast of one another, so that the whole line extends over a full day's journey, and no animal can escape them. Truly it is a glorious sight to see the working of the dogs and the huntsmen on such an occasion! And as the Khan rides a-fowling across the plains, you will see these big hounds come tearing up, one pack after a bear, another pack after a stag, or some other beast, as it may hap, and running the game down now on this side and now on that, so that it is really a most delightful sport and spectacle.

The two brothers I have mentioned are bound by the tenure of their office to supply the Khan's court from October to the end of March with 1,000 head of game daily, whether of beasts or birds, and not counting quails; and also with fish to the best of their ability, allowing fish enough for three persons to reckon as equal to one head of game. —"The True Story of Marco Polo," by Noah Brooks, in St. Nicholas.

Gigantic Antarctic Icebergs.

"The snowfall of each year adds a new stratum to this ice-cap, which is as distinguishable to the eye as is the annual accretion of a forest tree," writes Gen. A. W. Greely, U. S. A., describing in the Ladies' Home Journal "What There Is at the South Pole." "Thus in centuries have accumulated on Antarctica these snows, which, by processes of pressure, thawing and regelation, have formed an ice-cap that in places exceeds 3,000 feet in thickness. Through the action of various forces—that of contraction and expansion by changing temperature being, perhaps, the most potent—this ice-cap creeps steadily seaward and projects into the ocean a perpendicular front from 1,000 to 2,000 feet in height. The temperature of the sea water being about twenty-nine degrees, the fresh water ice remains unwasted, and the ice-barrier plows the ocean bed until through flotation in deep water disruption occurs, and the tabular berg is formed. These bergs are of a size that long taxed the belief of men, but it is now well established that bergs two miles square and 1,000 feet in thickness are not rare; others are as large as thirty miles in length and some nearly 3,000 feet in thickness, their perpendicular, sun-wasted sides rising from 200 to 400 feet above the sea."

A Paris Wedding.

A very funny wedding was recently celebrated in a village near Paris. The bride was 46 years of age, and the bride-groom only 22. The bridal procession was formed at 8 o'clock in the evening and was led by a man riding a camel, a fiddler followed him seated on a donkey, the rest of the guests riding similar animals. In the only carriage rode the bride-groom's mother, who was only two years older than his wife. Great amusement was caused by this grotesque procession among the villagers, who accompanied it, carrying colored lanterns, and beating a wild tattoo upon the pots and frying pans and kettles.

A Student of Solomon.

Robert Fergusson, the unhappy Scottish poet so greatly admired by Burns, was a delicate child, and, perhaps for that reason, very fond of books. His chief delight was to read the Bible, and especially the Proverbs of Solomon. This early study caused him to take what he read very seriously to heart. One day little Bob ran into his mother's room, and with tears in his eyes cried out to her to whip him. She asked him what was wrong, and to her amazement, he replied with the utmost earnestness: "Oh, mother! 'he that spareth the rod hateth his son.'"

The first private library mentioned by historians was that of Aristotle, B.C. 334. Strabo says it was large, but does not mention the number of books.

Tin plate was manufactured in England and on the continent as early as 1507.

WHITHER OR WHENCE?

Oh! cherished voyager, drifting down
The shadow bed of the Unknown River,
With what strange, bright smile in thy sweet eyes brown,
And what wondrous smile on thy lips a-quiver,
What unseen hand at thy frail barque's prow
Is guiding thee swiftly adown the stream?
Ah! wake at our bidding, we pray thee, now,
Arouse from thy languor of sleep and dream!

We fain would stay thee, would clasp thy hand,
(Too passing sweet is that tender smile),
But no! Thou wavest farewell to land,
And floatest farther away the while;
Farther away as the night comes on,
Farther and farther with break of day—
Already thy craft from our sight has gone,
Has slipped from its moorings and sailed away.

The sunlight wooes thee, but all in vain,
The wild birds call thee, but no reply,
Thou shalt wake to their music no more again,
Nor bask in the sunlight; sweet friend, good-by!
A vision of sunlight blinds our sight,
We feel its glory as here we stand,
For us the voyage is toward the light,
For thee the shores of the unknown land.

THE KEEPER OF CRAGIE'S CUT.

Baxter, the new inspector of the Evansburg and Sauk Center Railroad, was not the only person who had been astonished at the first sight of the keeper of Cragie's bridge and the rock cut beyond. "L. C. Dolby, Section 27," he had read in his little book with the thumbed blue cover, and he had expected to see a grizzle-bearded man with a rough, red face and a stubby black pipe. For Cragie's was known to be one of the worst sections on the line. Its keeper was required to walk the mile from the end of the long bridge and through the cut twice a day, winter and summer, and it often required a cool head and a vigorous body to dodge the tramp freights that thundered back and forth with seeming disregard for time cards and running rules.

The new inspector had come down from Cragie's, walking the whole length of section 27. He had found everything in the best of order, not a bolt loose nor a spike gone and he felt, after the manner of new inspectors, like complimenting the vigilance of the keeper.

"Is L. C. Dolby in?" he asked when he reached the keeper's house on the hill.

"Yes, sir, will you walk in?" asked the rosy-cheeked girl who came to the door.

He stepped into the neatest of little sitting rooms. There were flowers in the windows and a cheery fire on the hearth in front of which a lazy tabby cat yawned a good-humored greeting.

"My name is Baxter, the new inspector, and I wished to see L. C. Dolby, the keeper of 27," he said.

The girl flushed slightly. He observed that her hair was cut short like a boy's and that her chin was firm and sharp.

"I am the keeper," she answered; "my name is Lettie C. Dolby, and I've had the place since father was injured last winter."

"That's right, and as good as a man she is, too!" came a gruff voice from the other room.

Lettie flushed again.

"It's father," she whispered; "won't you step in and see him? He's very glad to have visitors."

Baxter had not yet recovered from his surprise at finding that the slim, blue-eyed girl who stood before him was really keeper of Cragie's cut, and he allowed himself to be led into the other room. There, at a big, bright window, sat a man in a rocking chair. His face was of the chalky whiteness that comes from being always indoors, and his lap was spread with a plaid comforter. He looked prematurely old and worn.

"How are you?" he asked. "I'd get up, only——" and he motioned to his crippled legs with a faint smile.

"That's all right," responded Baxter, sympathetically; "keep your seat."

And Baxter, sitting there, heard Lettie explain the condition of section 27, and make her reports as promptly and very much more clearly than any of the keepers he had ever met. She spoke in a frank, almost boyish way, and she understood her work as well as Baxter himself did. Her father sat watching her quietly, adding a word here and there. Presently the clock in the further room struck 3, and Lettie started to her feet.

"It's time for me to make the rounds of the section," she said, and a moment later Baxter saw her lithe form, wrapped in a stout, dark cloak, disappear over the brow of the hill toward the tracks.

As he looked back he found Dolby watching him intensely. When he caught his eye the cripple leaned forward and touched Baxter's knee.

"There isn't a pluckier girl between St. Paul and Montana buttes," he said; "even if I do say it, who shouldn't."

"I don't see how she can manage the section," replied Baxter.

"That's what I say," exclaimed Dolby; "it's wonderful," and his pinched face lighted up with a smile that was beautiful to see. "It would go hard with all of us if it wasn't for Lettie."

"How did a girl happen to be appointed to such a place, anyway?"

"She's deserved it," Dolby answered, energetically; "she deserved it. They ain't many people that know all the facts excep' the superintendent—he knows, and he says Lettie can be keeper as long as she wants to.

"Course you remember the big blizzard we had last winter—the one that snowed in Evensburg, and Brockton, and Collinville and killed all the cattle on the Puddin' Bottom ranch. Well, it struck the Cragie country, too. Came up over the hill from back of the house early in the morning, and long before 10 o'clock there wasn't a fence to be seen in the country. Lettie's mother said I better not go down to the cut. She was afraid I might get lost. But I'd been at Cragie's off an' on for more'n eight years, and I thought I'd seen the worst the weather could do. So I went down the hill, and before I got ten rods from the house the snow had wiped it out, and all I could see were the whirling drifts and the path for a dozen feet ahead of me. And when I reached the cut there wasn't any cut there. It was filled to the top with snow. I wondered what the limited bound down for Cragie's would do. It was pretty sharp and cold when I reached the track this side of the bridge, and I had to get down on my hands and knees and crawl along from tie to tie just like a baby. I was strong in those days, too, only the wind and the snow were so terrible that I couldn't stand. And first thing I knew I had crossed the bare knoll at the bridge approach, and there I was hanging over the edge of the embankment like a bat to a rafter. Slipped before I knew it.

"'You're done for, Dolby,' I said to myself when I saw how little held me from falling into the chasm. It was 100 feet to the bottom, and jagged rocks all the way down. But I had grit, if I do say it, and I hung there for grim death, with the wind kicking and beating me about like a dead limb. I knew well enough there would be no one to help me, and that I couldn't help myself; but still I hung there. A man doesn't like to be dashed to pieces on a ledge of rocks unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

"Pretty soon I heard the limited squealing down the cut. I knew that Jim Crosby, the engineer, was floundering in the snow. I said to myself that if Jim succeeded in rooting through with his engine I might be saved, but I knew well enough that he wouldn't succeed. It would take four engines and two rotary plows to drive a tunnel through such a blizzard. And there she squealed and shrieked for hours, it seemed to me, while my hands and arms grew as numb as clubs.

"And Lettie—what was she doing all this time? When the snow covered the woodshed and began to creep up on the windows she was frightened. 'I'm afraid that father'll never get back,' she told her mother, who's always been fidgety and nervous like, began to walk up and down and wring her hands, not knowing what to do. Twelve o'clock came, and then I. Lettie started up and said: 'Mother, I'm going out to see if I can't find father,' and in spite of all her mother could do she bundled into her cloak and hood and opened the door.

"The snow was up to her waist, but the wind had mostly gone down. In the cut Jimmie Crosby's engine was callin' and screechin' for mercy, and Lettie, when she looked over the cliff couldn't see the train at all—only a big black hole where the smoke from the stack had melted the snow. But Lettie wasn't strong enough to get down to the tracks, for the path was drifted full, and a slim girl like her couldn't venture in without losing her life. She knew well enough that I was down the section somewhere—perhaps out on the bridge. But she didn't give up—not Lettie. There wasn't a man around the place to help—only in the train, and the train was at the bottom of the cut buried in the snow. She thought that if only she could get word to Jim Crosby he'd help her, for she knew him well. So she ran and got a coil of rope and tied one end of it to that stubby oak—there you can see it at the edge of the hill—and then she took hold of it and slid into the cut. That took grit—there aren't many men who would have risked it—let alone girls. Of course the snow got into her eyes and nose, and the rocky ledges cut and bruised her, but she never stopped until she was at the bottom. Jimmie Crosby said he saw something floundering in the snow outside of the cab and then somebody called:

"'Jim, oh, Jim.'

"It was Lettie. They dragged her into the cab, and as soon as she could talk she told Jim that I was lost in the blizzard.

"'We'll save him,' said Jim, and the fireman agreed to help, and so did a dozen other men who had come down from the train. And Jim, bein' a good climber, went up the rope hand over hand and helped a dozen or more men to follow him. By this time it had stopped snowing, and the sun shone bright in the west. They wallowed down through the drifts to the bridge, Lettie following. They tried to leave her at home, but she wouldn't stay. 'If father's in danger,' she said, 'I'm going' to help find him.'

"I heard 'em when they reached the bare knoll this side of the bridge. I had crooked one leg around a sleeper and I still hung there over the chasm. I don't believe I could have let go. I guess I was frozen there. I tried to shout and let them know where to find me, but I couldn't get my mouth open. It was clean suffering, that. For there was help within reach and I couldn't make a sound.

"But Lettie knew the path I usually took and first thing I knew she was on her knees at the end of the bridge crying:

"'Here he is; oh, father, father.'

"After that I don't remember much. Jim said they carried me to the house and laid me on the bed, but I didn't get back to my right senses for two or three days.

"I almost forgot to tell you that one of the men who helped me was Bradley, the superintendent. When he saw Lettie and heard of what she had done he just took off his hat, this way, and held it before him.

"'You're the bravest girl I've ever met,' he said."

Dolby paused as if he liked to remember this part of the story.

"The passengers, oh, they escaped by Lettie's rope and were driven into Cragie's. And that night when the superintendent was talking about who shall be keeper of section 27 Lettie spoke up, timid-like:

"'Mr. Bradley, let me watch it; I can do it almost as well as father.'

"The superintendent looked at her for a moment, and then he said:

"'I believe you can, Lettie.'

"From that day to this L. C. Dolby has been keeper of 27. I've never recovered—my legs and my back—but the doctor still gives me hope. And I couldn't get along without Lettie——"

But the old man's voice broke. Baxter, shaking hands with him silently, went out toward Cragie's, where he sent a glowing report of the excellent condition of section 27, L. C. Dolby, keeper.

Eccentric Generosity.

Nicholas Longworth, one of the wealthiest citizens of Cincinnati a few years ago, was noted for his eccentric charities. Those whom others refused to help found a friend in him. "Decent paupers will always find plenty to help them," he would say, "but no one cares for the 'devil's poor.' Everybody condemns them, so I must turn to and help them."

Mr. Longworth was plain and careless in his dress, often looking more like a beggar than a millionaire. Indeed, it afforded him no little amusement to be taken for a mendicant, as he several times was in the course of his life.

One cold winter evening a poor man called at the house very thinly clad, and Mrs. Longworth improved the opportunity to suggest to her husband that he should give away a certain "Hard Times" overcoat which she had grown tired of seeing him wear. He readily assented, and Mrs. Longworth, much pleased that the objectionable garment was out of the way, placed a fine broadcloth one upon the rack, where he would easily find it in the morning.

But Mr. Longworth went off to business without it, and came home at noon, greatly to his wife's chagrin, wearing a new coat of the "Hard Times" variety.

At another time Mr. Longworth was accosted by a deserving beggar at the entrance to his warehouse.

"What do you need most?" Mr. Longworth asked.

"A pair of shoes," was the reply.

"Ah, yes, I see," said the millionaire, with a quick glance at the man's feet. He kicked off his right shoe—his shoestrings were seldom tied—and said, "Try that on, my man. How does it fit?"

"Illigant, yer honor."

"Then try that one, too," said Mr. Longworth, as he kicked off the other shoe. "How will they do?"

"Illigant, yer honor! illigant! May many a blessing——"

"Well, well, go now," said the merchant, "that'll do;" and then, calling a boy, he sent him to the house to ask Mrs. Longworth for another pair of shoes.

The boy soon returned.

"Mrs. Longworth says there isn't a pair of shoes left in the house," said the lad, "you've give 'em all away."

"All right," laughed Mr. Longworth. "Run down to Mr. Hart's and ask him to send me up a pair of shoes, the kind I always buy; and mind, here's a two-dollar bill, but don't you give more'n a dollar and a half for them."

Revival of an Old Fashion.

The fashion of wearing long chains of gold about the neck is attractive. The chains should be strong enough to hold the watch tucked into the belt, and often a tiny gold purse, and bunch of gold-plated keys that are better carried by the mistress than by the maid. These chains are supposed to be for use, and are seen with tailor-made shopping costumes.

Parisians are carrying, while shopping, dainty bags of brocaded silk with gold clasps and ornaments or bags of fancy leather bound with gold or silver. This is a coquettish revival of an old fashion and does not necessarily suggest a shopping trip by a suburbanite. The small bags of white leather, with clasp, chain and monogram of gold, are particularly attractive, and the extreme is a bag ten times larger than a purse, of fine gold mesh. Its price is not one of its attractions, but in Paris there are always patrons of the expensive fads introduced by the jewelers.

Most Ancient Copper Mines.

The most ancient copper mines in the world are those of the Sinai peninsula, near the Gulf of Suez. They were abandoned 3,000 years ago, having been worked for some hundreds of years. The process used in the production of the ore is said to be similar in principle to that used at the present time.

Too Young.

Recruit—Sixteen.

The New Horseshoer's Law.

The evident purpose of the new law requiring horseshoers to be licensed in cities of this State, of over 50,000 inhbitants, is to prevent incompetent men from shoeing horses in the larger cities. It is a well-known fact that a large percentage of the lameness of horses, especially in the cities, is due wholly or in part to the mutilation of the hoof and improper shoeing by incompetent blacksmiths. Even at the best every shoeing is an injury to the horse's foot, so that the better the operation the less the injury.

Horseshoers, as a class, are wedded to a number of traditional practices long handed down from generation to generation, that are directly opposed to the preservation of the foot in its natural, healthy condition. They do not consider the shoeing complete and workmanlike unless they have sliced away the greater portion of the frog; carved out the sole until it will readily yield to the pressure of the thumb; "opened up the heels," and rasped off the protecting covering from the lower half or two-thirds of the wall by cutting the hoof down to fit their idea of a shoe, instead of making a shoe to fit the foot. The result is that, instead of leaving the feet as nearly as possible in the condition in which nature made them to withstand the wear and tear of use, they are robbed of their natural cushion and protecting covering, and so weakened as to be subject to concussion, bruises and contraction.

The more ignorant the blacksmith, the more tenaciously he adheres to his traditional creed, and the less amenable is he to any suggestions as to a more rational and less destructive method of shoeing. I would not be understood as saying that all blacksmiths are of the class described. There is, occasionally, a progressive horseshoer who is endeavoring to improve his profession, and is studying to improve the methods of shoeing.—Rural New-Yorker.

Art in Agriculture.

Art in agriculture is coming to be more and more noticeable every day. With the advent of new methods, improved implements and a wider knowledge of the field, the agriculturist is rising higher and higher in the field of useful or ornamental art as the years go by. We may say that sharp competition is no small factor in this progressive movement, says The American Student. Take, for example, the manner in which certain products are prepared for the open market. The improvement in the condition of certain dairy products and fruit on market in the last few years is truly wonderful. The reason, of course, is that people always buy that article which is put up in the most tasty and attractive style, and are willing to pay a little more for it. With this change comes a more wholesome effect upon the article itself, and disease is much less disseminated through food at the present time than formerly. Greater precautions are taken now than ever before in preventing the spread of contagious diseases in this manner, and with the increase in the size of the cities and the greater liability to ill health these precautions cannot be observed too carefully. Thus the agriculturist, to be successful, must keep right up to date in his readings and methods.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

To Handle Game.

Game must not be drawn except in warm weather, and then ice should be used. Wild turkeys and ducks should be packed in their natural state. Partridge, grouse (prairie chickens), woodcock and quail arrive in better order and sell better when wrapped in paper. Trapped birds sell better than those that have been shot; those badly shot should not be packed with others, as they may injure or spoil the whole package. Pack large game in barrels and small game in boxes. Venison, when shipped whole, should have the liver and lights removed, as they have to be thrown away by receiver. When sending saddles, strip the skin from the fore part of the deer and wrap about the saddle to keep it clean and in good order.

Grafting Wax.

Any grafting wax is liable to melt in a very hot sun. The remedy is immediately after applying the wax wind a strip of thin cloth around the grafts. This will adhere to the wax and keep it from melting. The seed of any good apples will make strong and healthy seedlings for root grafting, but the most desirable seed is supposed to be crab apple seed, out of which the inferior seeds have been sorted by hand.

Receipt for Grafting Wax.—Four parts rosin, two parts tallow, one and a half parts beeswax; melt all together and pour into cold water, then work same as molasses candy.

For Root Grafts.—Four parts rosin, two and a quarter parts tallow, three-fourths parts beeswax.

Plant an Orchard.

Don't neglect your orchard if you have one. If you haven't a respectable sized orchard on the place, don't stand in your own light any longer, but set one out. The preserves, jams, marmalades, etc., that you enjoy so much through the fall and winter should remind you of the necessity of having a first-class and good-sized orchard.—Exchange.

Horticulture Hints.

A bird in the bush is worth two in the hand. Don't kill the birds.

Howell County, Mo., boasts of the largest peach orchard in the world.

If shrubs require pruning, the best time to do the work is just after the flowering is over.

On a farm near a market, more money can be made from gardening than from general farming.

Apples in the cellar will keep much better if care is taken to keep the temperature even, and as low as possible.

Keep a watch out for the rabbits; they will girdle the young fruit trees, especially if there is snow on the ground.

By keeping a register or record of the trees in the orchard, one can at all times tell the name of a doubtful tree. Labels are apt to come off, or be destroyed; the book may be depended upon.

A good position for the new orchard is to the north and west of the farm buildings, if other things are equal. The buildings will thus protect the young trees from the high winds of winter.

Evaporators are coming into use for saving our vegetable products, as well as for fruits. When the surplus of the garden can be taken care of in this way, market gardening will become even a better business than it is now.

Poultry Points.

Most poultry houses get more ventilation than they need.

Coal oil applied to the roosts in small quantities will kill parasites.

Among the larger breeds the Black Langshans are hard to beat as layers.

Market all quarrelsome roosters, over-fat hens and non-laying pullets at once.

To keep hens in a laying condition they need frequent change of food; meat is a good stimulant.

For scaly legs: Rug the scales off as much as possible, and then soak thoroughly in kerosene. Repeat dose in twenty-four hours.

He Came Off Best.

He was no sooner seated in the cozy parlor than she took the initiative.

"Since you proposed to me last week I have given the matter a great deal of thought, Mr. Chumpley."

"Mr. Chumpley! Why, you have called me Bertie for ages!"

"That's neither here nor there. I have concluded that I must decline the great honor you have proffered me."

"Ah! Certainly. But you must pardon me for not understanding just what you refer to. I have so much to think of in a social way, you know."

"But you must recall the last conversation you had with me."

"Deuced stupid of me, Mamie, but it has slipped my memory. Something about the horse show?"

"Never mind, Mr. Chumpley. Don't incur the risk of overtaxing your mind in trying to recall our little talk."

"So sorry! But a fellow will forget some things. Must do it, you know, if you're in the whirl. Can't you just give me a hint?"

"It is of no consequence at all, sir. I only have a vague recollection of the conversation myself. But I'm not feeling well, Mr. Chumpley, and must ask you to excuse me for the evening."

"Too bad. And you look in brilliant health. Only temporary indisposition, of course. But I'll not detain you. I'm going straight home and cudgel my brain till I bring back that talk."

"Do nothing of the kind. I never want to hear of it again."

When he was gone she acknowledged to herself that there was much more to him than she had suspected, and that he had decidedly given her the worst of their little sparring match.

Chumpley walked down the street chuckling and congratulating himself. She always boasted gleefully of the men whom she had refused, but he had no fear that she would add him to the list.—Detroit Free Press.

Light requires eight minutes and eighteen seconds to pass from the sun to the earth when at its mean distance; therefore, when we look at the sun we see him, not where he actually is, but where he was about eight minutes and eighteen seconds ago; his true place is then always in advance of his apparent place.

DUSKY BELLES IN BLOOMERS.

Bicycle Costumes the Rage Among the New Women of Africa.

Who knows but the bicycle may yet be recognized as one of the foremost agents of civilization! Much stranger things have happened in the world's economy. It is recorded that the new woman has suddenly appeared among the native tribes of Africa, where the black belles have discarded earrings and breechloths and donned bicycle bloomers, much to the astonishment of the swarthy warriors. The negro women on the outskirts of the forest, where they come into close contact with European civilization, have gone crazy over the bicycle.

NATAL'S NEW WOMAN.

Hitherto it has been a comparatively easy matter for the young black men to satisfy the cravings of their sweethearts for articles of personal adornment, as the styles never changed and the amount of clothing the women were in the habit of wearing was extremely limited. Now, however, the latter not only want a complete bicycle outfit, including bloomers, hat and stockings, but an up-to-date machine as well, with cyclometer, lamp, kit of tools and all the other attachments.

At first the native swains of Natal bought for their sweethearts the old, high-wheeled bicycles which were discarded by the European market. These for a time satisfied the aspirations of the native African belles. They quickly learned, however, that wheels of this pattern were out of date, and that the safety with inflated tires was the proper thing. Since that time no black girl making any pretensions to style in Natal will be satisfied with anything less than a wheel of the '95 or '96 pattern.

One of these ladies of color in Natal recently posed for a photograph against a background of gum trees and buffalo grass, with a native kraal in the distance. She wore a checked suit, consisting of a Norfolk jacket, with a belt and bloomers that fitted close about the hips. On her head an Alpine hat was jauntily set. So up to date was this African maid that she disdained bicycle stockings, and wore the short socks coming halfway to the knee that are the latest thing among the fair bicyclers of Paris.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 9. 1897

The Governor ought to sign the bill passed to pay for the bounties due on coyote scalps, notwithstanding the amateur lobbyists from Bakersfield seem to have used money to get votes in the Assembly for the bill. The State offered $5 for every coyote scalp and provided a method by which the scalps should be received and certificates issued in payment therefor. It was a bad business proposition to begin with, but there can be no excuse for the State in repudiating the debt created under the law.

We do not believe that there has been anything like the amount of fraud in the coyote scalp business that the papers published in San Francisco would try to make the people believe. Nearly all the talk about fraud originated from a report made by an expert employed by the Kern county grand jury two years ago. The so called expert spent a long time in going through the books of the supervisors and other county officials, and closed his career by recommending the indictment of a large number of people all of whom have since been acquitted by juries. Quite a number of persons accused of fraud in connection with claims allowed for coyote scalps were tried, but in none of them was there any evidence to sustain the charges of the grand jury's expert.

The bill as it passed the Legislature was framed in accordance with the recommendations of the State board of examiners, and under it the board have the power to reject all claims that are fraudulent. It should have passed both houses without a dissenting vote, simply because the State has no right to repudiate an honest debt. The men most interested in the passage of the bill showed very bad judgment in permitting lobbyists to stay around the legislature, because a rascally assemblyman will not vote in favor of a good bill if there is any chance to make somebody pay him to do his duty. The Governor should consider the bill upon its merits and entirely apart from the methods used to get corrupt assemblymen to vote for it. Common honesty demands that the men who have legitimate claims against the State for coyote scalps should be paid.—Tulare Times.

The taxpayers of California are to be congratulated on having as the chief executive of the State a man of the firmness of James H. Budd. By his bold and determined stand on Saturday he saved the people of this State about $1,000,000 a year for the next two years and at the same time set an example that future Governors will have to follow. The Senators who had resolved to make politics for themselves, even if it should be necessary to saddle the State with the expense of an extra session of the Legislature, were rebuked and circumvented. They stormed and raged, but the Governor stood like a rock. That timely message of Saturday morning will live in history. It gave warning that were the extravagant demands of the Senate not withdrawn the Governor would veto the entire general appropriation bill. The Legislature knew the man, and while they argued and talked for six solid hours, at the last they yielded because there was nothing else to do; and so instead of a tax levy of over 50 cents, as there would have been had the Senatorial ideas prevailed, the levy, including the 2 cents for the University, will be 43¾ cents on each $100 worth of assessable property.

It is a good thing to have a Governor like James H. Budd on guard, and shows the advantage of electing to the highest office in the State, a man experienced in public life, familiar with legislation and legislative ways and possessed of the strong personality necessary to dominate and direct affairs and men.—S. F. Report.

The Cuban situation is thus summed up by a correspondent of the New York World, writing from Havana, under date of 22nd inst.: "Only a few of the more excitable Spanish officers refuse to admit that Cuba is lost to the Crown. Resident Spanish confess that they can see no other outcome. The calmest minds predict the end of Spanish rule within two years. The proposition of Cisneros and Gomez to buy the island is rapidly growing in popularity here. Its warmest advocates are Spanish and Cuban residents here loyal to the Crown. They are the active financial and business men of the island—the owners of eight-tenths of its wealth and its sources of wealth. The Spanish element is condemning with more and more emphasis the fruitless, exhausting policy of General Weyler. They see his idea of pacification is depopulation, his plan of peace devastation."

There is no material change in the Cretan situation, excepting that the ships of the Powers are co-operating with the Turks in a blockade of the island. The Greek army is still on the island, and its attitude is that of defiance to the Powers, though there is no actual fighting.

While the House of Representatives is debating the tariff bill the Senate is killing time over the arbitration treaty. There is small prospect of its passage unless with such emendation as will practically nullify it.

Stockmen and butchers in Solano county have offered $20 each for coyote scalps, showing how valuable stock is. It is enough to start the coyote farms in the mountains.

Where is that wave of prosperity that the Republicans predicted?

DIED.

DRYER—Near Bishop, March 25, 1897, Jesse A. Dryer, a native of New York, aged about years.

JOSEPH—In Oakland, March 28, 1897, Isaac Joseph, beloved husband of Hinda Joseph and father of Louis Joseph, Mrs. H. Levy, Miss Ray Joseph, Mrs J. C. Harris, Mrs. A. Hockwald and Isador and Joe Joseph, a native of Poland, aged 70 years.

James Prewett was up from Little Lake on Saturday last.

Board of Supervisors will meet next Monday in regular session.

John McBride of Benton was a visitor at Independence on Wednesday last.

Mr. E. T. Allen, of Denver, one of the principal owners of the Reward mining property, is expected to arrive here in a few days.

Perry Gunter, James M. Randle, Dave Randle and John L. Casner arrived from Laws on Wednesday on business in the Land Office.

Isaac Joseph, father of Mrs. H. Levy of this place and of Louis Joseph of Big Pine, died in Oakland on Sunday last, aged 70 years.

A charter has been received by the Rebekahs of this locality for their new lodge. It will be designated the Olive instead of the Owen lodge as heretofore notified.

George De Sallier, an old-time resident of this section, and A. H. Walrath, of Nevada City, have been in this vicinity for the past month inspecting mining properties for capitalists.

The Legislature has passed a bill compelling corporations to pay their employes every month, under heavy penalties for a failure to comply. The Governor signed the bill and it is now a law.

General Ruiz Rivera who succeeded Antonio Maceo in command of the insurgent forces in Pinar del Rio, Cuba, was captured by the Spanish soldiers last Sunday. He is considered next in military importance to General Gomez.

The mining outlook for this section for the coming summer is certainly encouraging. Quite a number of new finds are being worked and prospecting is being carried on with renewed vigor. Men representing capital are here and seeking investments.

Last Saturday a school bond election was held at Big Pine, for the purpose of issuing bonds to enlarge the school house which is at present inadequate to accommodate the pupils. The bonds were defeated by a vote of 40 to 29. We are informed that the cause of defeat was factional feeling.

Senator Hoar from the judiciary committee, last Monday, reported favorably the bill to prevent the use of the kinetoscopic exhibitions of prizefights in the district of Columbia or the territories. It also prohibits the mailing of prizefight pictures or their receipt from common carriers. Heavy penalties are provided.

The steamfitters of New York struck on Monday last. Between 30,000 and 60,000 may be involved. The bosses announced Saturday that the agreement hitherto existing between them and the employes would no longer be considered and those who wished to report for work Monday morning must sign new rules. The men refused to sign.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery in modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn of Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever tried for cramps in the stomach and bowels. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Up to the present this season promises favorably for the the agricultural interests of this valley. The abundant snow falls on the Sierras should provide a copious water supply. The low temperatures which have reigned during the past few weeks have retarded the fruit trees, and the recent night frosts have only caught a few of them notably apricots and these have been partially damaged. The birds however are threatening to become a serious pest during summer; they are very numerous, and in several gardens around town have already commenced their depredations by completely clearing off sprouting lettuce and other seeds as soon as the young leaves appeared above the surface. All such should be guarded by netting or otherwise protected.

New Discovery.

The following from the Los Angeles Express will be of interest to many of our readers, who will be pleased to learn that the fickle goddess has once more smiled on W. T. Grant, our Billy.

Messrs. Tom Keefe, W. T. Grant and Fred Williams returned a few days ago from the Coso range, about twenty miles northwest of Randsburg, where they made a rich strike in the shape of a twenty-foot vein of silver ore which runs 127 ounces silver and 16 per cent lead. The distance between walls is fully twenty feet, with a number of two foot stringers of the ore running through it. A contract has been let for sinking a fifty-foot shaft on the vein and driving a forty-foot drift on same. It is expected that by the time the fifty foot level is reached the vein will be solid ore from wall to wall. The claim was discovered on the 22nd of February and appropriately named the Washington. There is an abundance of water near by and everything considered it is one of the best strikes reported for some time. Negotiations for the sale of the property have already been opened, and if carried to a successful issue, there is a strong probability that reduction works for the handling of the ore will be erected in the vicinity of the mine.

The same gentleman also discovered and located five good claims three miles north of Garden Station, the rock from which runs from $45 to $100 free gold. These ledges run from one to two feet in width on the surface.

The Advent of Spring.

The spring-time is now upon us and though ushered in with tempestuous winds and blossom killing frost; it is none the less welcome. Time is now to buy the young ones brighter and lighter clothing to match the many coloured flowerets breaking through the redolent sage brush; to sow the gardens with such fruits of the earth and flowers as bring gladness to our hearts and pleasure to our lives as the year grows older: it is pleasanter to cull from one's own patch than to buy at store, or beg of neighbor. Our out-door diversions are somewhat limited, but a little energy expended in organizing such games as baseball and croquet would be surely responded to. Trout fishing began yesterday, and though no catches of this fish are yet reported we understand a few suckers were brought to bank. The spring chicken is growing in size and let us hope in alertness and understanding, that it may avoid many and varied depredators which here beset and menace its younger and more tender days. The spring girl will shortly blossom forth and

In the Spring a livelier iris glistens on the burnished dove.
In the Spring a young man's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of love.

Married at Bishop

It is with no small degree of pleasure that we chronicle the marriage of our esteemed station agent, Martin Church to Miss Grace G. Collins, of Poleta. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Andrew Clark at his residence, near Bishop, on the 19th of March last, in the presence of a few intimate friends. The young and charming bride has a host of friends in this community who will gladly welcome her to her new home, and who join with us in wishing the newly married couple the greatest success and happiness. We are always in favor of plenty of schools and more churches.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; to-day Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Wherever the good qualities of Chamberlains's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Bids for the care of Indigent Sick, Stationery and Printing, boarding prisoners at County Jail and Bishop branch jail, advertising Delinquent Tax List and services of County Physician, will be received by the Clerk till 10 o'clock a. m., of Thursday, April 8th. The bids will be opened and passed upon between the hours of 10 o'clock a. m. and 2 o'clock p. m. of that day.

Samuel Spratt, the sawmill man of Big Pine, was in town on Monday last. Mr. Spratt informs us that there is only a small amount of snow at the mill, and that if storms don't interfere, he will commence sawing lumber in three weeks. While here he purchased a shingle mill from Gus Stecker, which he will place in position at the mill in a few days.

Henry Levy, proprietor of the Independence Hotel, took two drummers to Bishop Wednesday, returning Thursday with Felix Coblentz, the liquor merchant, and H. Cullinane, traveling salesman for Buckingham & Hecht.

A SOLID BASIS.

Gold is a solid basis of financial transaction, and for business that's the best thing for us. It is so in the physical conditions. If by some carelessness or exposure to sudden cold the muscles of the back are contracted and stiffened, we have at once lumbago, or lame back, sometimes called "crick in the back," which is disabling and unfits all who have it for any activity. Now, to get back to a solid basis of health and strength, St. Jacobs Oil should at once be used to relax the twisted muscles and restore to their natural condition. It takes but a short time to perform the cure and the cure is certain. The back is then on a solid basis for strength and work, and nothing will bring about the change like this great remedy for pain.

The Old Telegrapher.

The old telegrapher was relating his experiences. "Do you know," he remarked, "a man in my profession develops such a wonderful acuteness of touch and hearing that it might well be called a sixth sense. While I was correspondent for the United Press at New Haven there used to be a man on the New York end of the wire whom I knew as well as I know my own brother, and yet I had never seen him. I had known him in this manner for years, and solely by the manner in which he ticked his instrument. The moment I opened my key and got my response I could tell if it was he. Ill health compelled him to go south. He was gone six months. He returned unexpectedly one night and took his place at the key for a few minutes to open up a conversation with me. It was after the midnight recess, and his successor had been on duty in the fore part of the night. I had received no intimation of his coming, and yet the instant he called me I knew his touch, and I firmly believe I should have known it among a thousand."—New York Times.

Gladness Comes

With a better understanding of the transient nature of the many physical ills which vanish before proper efforts—gentle efforts—pleasant efforts—rightly directed. There is comfort in the knowledge that so many forms of sickness are not due to any actual disease, but simply to a constipated condition of the system, which the pleasant family laxative, Syrup of Figs, promptly removes. That is why it is the only remedy with millions of families, and is everywhere esteemed so highly by all who value good health. Its beneficial effects are due to the fact, that it is the one remedy which promotes internal cleanliness, without debilitating the organs on which it acts. It is therefore all important in order to get its beneficial effects, to note when you purchase, that you have the genuine article, which is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, and sold by all reputable druggists.

If in the enjoyment of good health, and the system is regular, then laxatives or other remedies are not needed. If afflicted with any actual disease, one may be commended to the most skillful physicians, but if in need of a laxative, then one should have the best, and with the well-informed everywhere, Syrup of Figs stands highest and is most largely used and gives most general satisfaction.

Like An Old Clock.

SET BACK TWENTY YEARS.

DR. WILLIAMS THE INSTRUMENT.

From the Republican, Fresno, Cal.

A case reported from Fresno County is that of a well known former resident of Kingsburg, though now residing at Selma.

Mr. J. M. Purves is an old gentleman of seventy, who, during his long residence in Kingsburg, was beloved alike by young and old, and he is equally endeared to the people of his new home.

It was about July 15, 1896, that a reporter of the Republican met Mr. Purves, and was astonished to see such an improvement in his appearance. He looked ten years younger and much stouter than when he moved away from Kingsburg for the benefit of his health, and he was congratulated on his improved appearance.

"I was all run down when I moved away," Mr. Purves said; "something like an old clock that is worn out, but I have undergone such repairs as I think will keep me in running order for many years to come if no accident occurs."

"What was the agent that wrought the change, Mr. Purves?" the reporter asked. "Was it Pink Pills? They seem to be doing all the healing in Fresno County."

"Pink Pills are the very things that have built me up," Mr. Purves answered. "I happened to read one of the advertisements of their healing qualities, and then read several more, and somehow there was something in the way the testimonials read that assured me they were true. One in the San Francisco Examiner especially impressed me, and I sent at once and bought some of the pills. I took them as directed, and I do not think I need tell you what they have done for me. I am quite recovered and set back in the journey of life at least twenty years. I have done more work since I have taken them than for a long, long time before. Indeed, I may say, since long before you were born.

I took only two boxes in all, but I shall always keep them by me as long as I live, in case of relapse."

(Signed) J. M. PURVES.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

Noah and Money.

"The financial situation has caused considerable research on the subject," remarked the cheerful idiot to his pastor the other day. "I suppose," he continued, "that you have made a study of the moneys of the Bible?"

"Oh, yes," replied the minister blandly. "I am familiar, to be sure, with the Biblical coins."

"I infer that paper money was used at the time of the flood," continued the idiot, sparring for a chance to make a home thrust.

"What has led you to this conclusion?" asked the pastor.

"Well, we read of where the dove brought the green back to Noah."—Washington Times.

His Prescription.

Boerhaave, the greatest doctor of his time, was anxious that it should go forth that even the most eminent doctor is somewhat of a "humbug." He carefully handed the key of a small diary to his executor, bade him open it immediately after his decease and let the contents go forth to the world at large. When the notebook was opened, all its pages but the last were blank, and on that final one there was written in large letters: "Directions to patients: Keep your feet warm and your head cool and trust for the rest to Providence."—San Francisco Argonaut.

TWINS IN SIZE, SHAPE and ACTIVITY

This is what those important little organs, the kidneys are when healthy. In disorder they may differ in all three particulars. Disease usually destroys them successively, not simultaneously, and one may be active while the other is semi-paralyzed. Give to both a healthful impulse, without exciting them, with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which forestalls such dreadful maladies as Bright's disease and diabetes. Use the Bitters, also, for malarial, bilious rheumatic, nervous, bowel and kidney trouble.

THE : FAIR : CANDIDATE.

THE "machine" of one of the political parties of Butte County was at work. The wheel-horses of the organization were in executive session and the manufacture of a "slate" for the ratification of the county convention was in progress. Everything had been settled without friction up to a certain point, but here the making of candidates came to a full stop. Some one must be selected to run for Superintendent of Schools, and some one else must be found who was disinterested enough to stand for the place of County Surveyor, with the nominal emoluments pertaining thereto. This latter problem was settled, after a brief discussion, by the powers insisting that Al Wood, the incumbent, who was present, must stand for re-election, whether he liked it or not; but a duly qualified candidate for Superintendent of Schools was not so easily found. The man who had held that position for two years past had the bad taste to give up his office and his grasp on life at the same time, only two weeks before, thus leaving his party in a quandary for a candidate to succeed him. Of course, there were plenty of asprants for the nomination, but most of them were unavailable for reasons political, and the candidate must be a person who was popular with the voters of the county.

"Jimmie" Van Wert, the handsome young assayer of the Spread Eagle Mill, had been sitting in a dark corner of the office in which the conference was being held, smoking quietly and saying very little until now; but he finally put in his oar long enough to suggest that "Professor" Striker, the young principal of the local school, would make a good man for the office.

"Ya-as," assented Judge Bullock, the venerable Justice of the Peace, "but they don't know him out in th' kentry, an' we got t' have some feller th't c'n ketch th' aoutside vote. Now, Jimmie, look yere. What's th' matter with you runnin' f'r Super'ntend'nt y'rself?"

"Don't get me mixed in on a deal like that!" ejaculated Van Wert, fervently. "I don't want any old office. I've got troubles enough now."

But Judge Bullock's suggestion met with unanimous approval on the part of all the others present, and, very much against his will, Mr. Van Wert was slated for the nomination, and duly placed in nomination by the convention a few days later. It was two weeks before he found out what sort of an opponent he was to have, and then, much to his disgust, he learned that the other party had nominated a girl.

This was almost enough to make him throw up the canvass. The idea of the other fellows thinking that he could be beaten by a woman. Then he consoled himself with the reflection that perhaps they knew they couldn't beat him, and had merely put up this Miss Smith to act as a forlorn hope. Thenceforth he did not put much activity into his canvass, but attended to business pretty much as usual, serene in the belief that the voters of Butte County were not yet arrived at the stage of progression when they would permit a woman to hold office. And all this time, be it known, this heretofore unknown and mysterious Miss Smith was becoming known to the voters of the county, and, what was more, she was winning a good deal of support from sources upon which Van Wert confidently counted.

It lacked only about ten days of election day when Van Wert, with a sudden shock, came to his senses. Two or three things had occurred to detract from his overconfidence. Among these was the avowal on the part of several personal and political friends of their intention to support Miss Smith, giving as their reasons that she had a good record as an educator and was without doubt well qualified for the office; that she wanted the office, and was making a hard fight for it; and that Van Wert didn't want it and didn't need it. On top of this he was informed that his opponent had been out in the "cow districts," and had the cowboy vote pretty well "cinched." This cheering announcement came from two or three of the "bosses" who called on him to see if he didn't think it worth while to get out and save his political scalp by "rustling" like the rest of the candidates. "We'll have the committee fix some dates for you to speak, and you've got to fill 'em, Jimmie; if you don't you're a gone goose," said they.

So, with the inward fear that he might, after all, be defeated, Van Wert began in earnest the effort to save himself. He did not care for the office, but he dreaded defeat at the hands of a woman, being one of the kind of men who do not believe the gentler sex has any business in politics. He pictured Miss Smith as a big, gaunt, red-haired, self-assertive person, with large red hands and a snappy way of speaking—and was quite surprised to learn that she was really a very ladylike young woman, tipping the beam at about 110 pounds.

It lacked but four days of election day, and the various candidates were putting in every hour possible in making speeches and seeing their constituents and other people. Van Wert had put in some very telling work in several places where it would do the most good, but in two or three precincts it was found that a strong sentiment in favor of his opponent had developed, and must be overcome by some means if he hoped to win. Unfortunately, he was worried, and his actions showed it; on one or two occasions while speaking he had given way to puerile bursts of temper that by no means enhanced his chances for success. Some of the older heads had warned him that by making slurring remarks about his opponent he would only hurt himself, to which he responded by the childlike remark: "Well, if a woman doesn't want to get herself talked about she'd better keep out of politics."

This he practically repeated to a mixed crowd at Conover's schoolhouse, in one of the strong "cow districts," on Friday night before election, adding: "I cannot believe that parents interested in the future welfare of their children are willing to intrust their early training to the hands and methods of one who so far forgets her womanhood as to stand as a candidate for a public office." Of course he regretted the remark almost as soon as it was uttered, and recognized that the silence with which it was received was the silence of a disapproval too strong to find expression in words. But it was too late for regrets, and he expressed none.

The next afternoon came a brief but pointed note from Miss Smith, in which she gently reminded him that his youth had evidently led him astray so far as to forget the fact that she was practically defenseless, and that in speaking of her as he had he had been both unmanly and ungentlemanly. This, coming as it did, at a time when he was mentally cursing himself for an ass and a brute, did not tend to soothe him, for he knew that every word the note contained was true. So, instead of answering it as a man should, he wrote at the bottom of the sheet: "You have no business in politics if you don't want to stand the consequences," then signed it and remailed it to the original sender. An hour later he was sorry he had done so, and tried to get the letter out of the postoffice, but failed.

Thus it was that the next evening, as he rode along the lonely trail leading to the "enemy's country," where he was to address a big meeting of cattlemen and make an effort to redeem himself by practically recanting all that he had said derogatory to the opposing candidate without losing too much of his already shattered self-respect, he was so absorbed mentally in thinking over what he should say that he did not hear a sudden command to halt, and realized that he was in trouble only when a sinuous, swishing thing hurtled through the air, pinioned his arms to his sides, and jerked him from his saddle to the rough ground.

"Good shot, ol' man!" said some one in cowboy costume, who came up and sat on the victim's chest. "Ye got him right 'round th' elbows, fust throw o' the rope."

"Let me up, you —— scoundrel!" fumed Van Wert. "You can take my money without taking my wind at the same time, can't you?"

"Easy, m' son," chuckled the giant who was sitting astride him, as he held the candidate's wrists so that the other man, who now came up, could the more easily tie them. "We don't want y'r stuff. Do we, pardner?"

"Nopey, Van," said the second man, in a voice that Van Wert tried in vain to recognize. "We jest want t' put ye where ye won't make no mo' fool r'marks 'bout th' lady th's' ag'n ye—not this evenin', anyways."

"See here, boys," said Van Wert, more calmly, "this isn't a square deal. You know I've got to be at the meeting at Meeker at 8 o'clock? Well, it's almost that now, so let me go."

"Oh, no, Jimmie!" laughed one of his captors heartlessly. "Not t'night. 'Squar' deal,' I b'lieve ye said? Was it a squar' deal f'r you t' git up an' make th' talk ye did 'bout th' little schoolma'am las' night? Not any. So stan' up, Jimmie, an' let th' gent tackle ye to th' tree. We'll let ye go 'fore ye git cold. Easy, lad. Ef ye git gay we won't do a thing but hawg-tie ye an' leave ye lay till mawnin'."

The next hour was as long a one as Jimmie Van Wert ever spent. The night was a chilly one, and the ropes with which he was bound prevented the free circulation of blood, so that in a very short time his extremities were aching with cold. To add to his discomfort, an owl took its station in the brush near by and hooted derisively whenever the prisoner shouted, and the cries of the owl were responded to by several wolves, whose voices sounded as though they were very close at hand.

Several times Van Wert heard people go by on horseback and in wagons, and shouted to them at the top of his lungs, but the trail was some distance from the clump of brush, and they did not hear him. At last, however, when he had about given up all hope of escaping until his captors should come and release him, he heard the sound of horses coming along the trail, their riders laughing and chatting, and he lifted up his voice in a mighty effort to make himself heard. The riders evidently heard him, and stopped. He shouted again, and presently heard them coming toward him.

"How did it happen?" queried the young woman, after she and the boy had released the candidate from his uncomfortable predicament, and he was untying his horse from a neighboring tree.

Van Wert explained in an injured tone, adding, with as much dignity as he could command: "I am the candidate for Superintendent of Schools, and I suppose this is a sample of the methods Miss Smith and her cowboy friends have adopted to defeat me. They knew I was to speak at Meeker to-night, and thought that by preventing me from doing so they could gain a few votes. I'll show 'em when I get there."

The young woman laughed merrily. "Politics is a funny business, isn't it?" she said. "The idea of resorting to such measures! But," she added soberly, "you should not blame Miss Smith for what her over-zealous friends have done. I—Miss Smith is a friend of mine, and I know she would not sanction such a thing. It—it would be most unfair to accuse her of it, don't you think, without being certain of your ground?"

Van Wert admitted that it would.

"Then as a favor to me," said his fair rescuer, "do not, please, say anything about it, at least by way of connecting her with the affair. I'm sure no one would regret it more than she, if she knew about it."

After some hesitation Van Wert promised, and presently his rescuer and her escort left him, branching off on a trail that led toward a farmhouse that he could see in the distance.

The candidate noted with a grim smile, on his return, the consternation his appearance created in a certain part of the room, and concluded that two or three men whom he knew to be friends of his looked rather sheepish, but he kept his own counsel and made no reference to his adventure. In the course of the excellent speech he presently made he "took back" what he had said about his opponent in a manner so graceful as to win for him rounds of applause, and when he sat down it was with the consciousness that he had in part redeemed himself.

As he started, along with some of the other candidates, to leave the hall, he noticed for the first time that the young woman who had rescued him from the "fix" in which the cowboys had left him had not gone home to stay when she left him, for there she was, just leaving the hall in company with an older woman in widow's weeds.

"Who is that?" he asked of the candidate for Sheriff, who was at his side.

"That girl?" queried the other. "Why, boy, that's your hated adversary, Miss Smith. Hadn't you seen her before?"

But Van Wert did not hear the question. He hurried to catch up with the opposing candidate, who started when he addressed her, but quickly recovered herself and smiled sweetly upon him.

"Miss Smith," he burst out impetuously, "I don't know what you must think of me, after all the low-down things I've said about you, and the holy show I made of myself this evening. But I hope you'll believe me when I say I'm sorry for the things I've said—and I honestly hope you'll be elected, after all. I shall vote for you, any way, and you can count on lots of my friends."

But his boyish enthusiasm in behalf of his opponent came too late to be of service to her, for the returns showed that Van Wert was elected by a small majority, for which he was indebted to the miners. On Thursday after election he went to Miss Smith.

"I regret this as much as you do," he said, earnestly. "I wish I had met you earlier in the campaign. But I have a proposition to make. What are you going to do now?"

"I don't know," she said, trying to conceal the sadness in her tones. "You see, I had to give up my school, and there are no vacancies now."

"Well, what I was going to propose is this: Will you take an appointment as my deputy? Remember, all the work will devolve upon you."

Miss Smith gasped, and her pretty face grew a rosy red, then turned pale. She did not wish to be under obligations to this man—and yet, there was the mother to be considered, and the invalid sister in Chicago, whose hospital bills were such a severe tax on the family resources. "Yes," she said, finally, "and thank you, very much, for offering me the place. You have lifted a great load from my mind."

There was some comment on this arrangement by the voters of the county, but it was hardly adverse, and the deputy soon showed that she was the right one in the right place. She worked day and night, and denied herself necessary sleep that her beloved schools should not retrograde; in fact, in the course of a few weeks she succeeded in making herself almost ill, for the death of the former superintendent had left the affairs of the office in rather chaotic condition, and although Van Wert and his deputy qualified at once after the meeting of the canvassing board, it was almost Christmas before they got matters straightened out.

And it was just at this time, when the little deputy, more than half ill from overwork, was spending a couple of days at home, that she got a brief note from her superior, which read:

"Miss Smith: For some time past I have been dissatisfied with you as Deputy Superintendent of Schools, and your resignation as such will be accepted. I will do myself the honor of calling upon you and explaining matters more fully to-morrow night. Very truly yours,

"JAMES VAN WERT."

Miss Smith burst into tears. "Just to think, mamma! After I have worked so hard! What shall we do?"

"I suppose they want the job for some politician that doesn't need it," commented Mrs. Smith, grimly. "But to think he has the audacity to come here after that! I won't let him in, the treacherous thing!—discharging you, after bing so friendly, and all that."

"Yes, you will, mamma," interjected the girl, recovering herself. "We must not forget ourselves in our own home."

Just then the door bell rang, and the girl hastened away to hide the traces of her tears. When she returned to the little parlor Van Wert was standing there, big and handsome, in front of the fireplace. He advanced to meet her as her mother vanished from the room.

"You got my note?" he said. "I'll tell you how it is," he went on awkwardly. "I'm not satisfied with you as a deputy because—because I want you to take the office itself and me with it."

And that was the way they arranged it.—New York Daily Tribune.

NEVER FAILS TO CURE.

Astonishing Record of the Great Paine's Celery Compound.

Paine's celery compound has never yet failed to cure.

Where all other medical treatment has failed to relieve Paine's celery compound has succeeded time and time again.

John W. Boyd of Mishawaka, Ind., says of his own case:

"Last winter I was taken down with a very severe attack of nervous and muscular rheumatism, so bad that I could not lie down, sit up, or stand, without the most excruciating pain. I was all the time under the care of two of the best physicians of the place, but I did not improve. I took different rheumatic cures and used an electric battery a half hour each day for 10 days, without any relief.

"Finally I concluded to try Paine's celery compound, and to my surprise after using one-half of a bottle I was able to get out and vote on election day, and before I used the whole bottle I went to work, and have worked every day since. I have gained twenty pounds in weight and am feeling first rate.

"My wife has also been taking it for nervousness, and thinks that there is nothing like it. We both recommend it to all of our acquaintances, and you are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit, for it truly worked wonders in my case."

And Paine's celery compound is working just such wonders in every State, county, city and village of the country today.

The reader must know some one who has tried it. Ask that person if he or she was not at once benefited!

Don't let a dealer palm off anything else on you, however; for there is as much difference between Paine's celery compound and all the ordinary sarsaparillas, tonics, nervines and compounds as there is between an electric motor and a boy's windmill.

There is power to cure in Paine's celery compound.

Strawberries in a Barrel.

A novel method of growing strawberries is suggested, which is adapted to gardens of very limited area. Take a barrel and bore inch holes through the side eight inches apart and in rows four inches apart, alternating in the rows. The plan is to set a strawberry plant in each hole, roots inside, of course. The process of planting is to fill the barrel with earth level with the lowest row of holes, then put in this row of plants and fill with earth to the next row, etc. A tiling, say of three inches in diameter, is put in the center of the barrel from near the bottom to above the top, and into this is poured water and liquid manure for irrigation and fertilizing. Such a barrel would require about one hundred and thirty-five plants, and it is said it has produced as high as five bushels of berries.—Horticulturist.

A Convenient Ladder.

A little forethought during the leisure hours of the winter season will provide many a useful implement for the farmer and gardener. During fruit season it is almost impossible to have a super-abundance of ladders for gathering fruit. The ladder portrayed herewith rests on five bearings, three of them adjustable as to length and position, and easily adapted to all inequalities of surface, perfectly secure and portable. A 6-foot ladder weighs about 40 pounds. The crane, or basket and hook holder, rotates, or may be shifted to either side of the operator; will support 30 pounds of fruit in a basket with ease, and the legs all fold in when required. The object is to provide a safe stand, and at the same time increase the facilities of the operator in picking fruit, pruning trees, etc., giving him the full use of both hands and placing the basket within easy reach of the same, thereby saving time in transporting the fruit from the tree to the basket. The fruit can also be handled with less damage from bruising, and it will therefore bring more money.—Farm and Home.

Early Radishes.

Soak some good radish seed in water for twenty-four hours; then put in a bag and expose to the sun. In the course of a day germination will commence. The seed must be sowed in well-manured hot-bed, and watered from time to time with luke-warm water. By this treatment the radishes will in a very short time acquire a sufficient bulk and be good to eat. If you wish good radishes in winter, during severe cold, an old cask should be sawn in two, and one-half of it filled with good earth. The radish seed, beginning to shoot as before, may be then sown, and the other half of the barrel put on top of the full one, and the whole of the apparatus carried into the cellar. For watering, luke-warm water should be used as before. In the course of five or six days the radishes will be ready to eat.—Rural World.

Oat and Pea Fodder.

We provide ourselves with oats and peas, mixed. It insures us against drought. We plant Canada peas, one and one-half bushels to the acre, and sow three bushels of oats. Put in as early as possible, and an acre at a time, every ten days, thus giving us crops all through the dry season. Peas alone will not stand up, and, moreover, do not make as good fodder as when mixed with oats. These may be cut and cured as hay. Put in the peas five inches deep; five or six days later drag in the oats.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

Young Trees Are Best.

The question is often asked: "Will not the continued planting of peach trees ruin the business?" Experts say no. "There are," says Central States Fruit Grower, "natural limitations on the industry that will prevent this. They are the extreme winters, frosts, yellows, lack of cultivation, failure to thin fruit, by which the tree overproduces, poor fruit, and last, a fact not sufficiently known, viz.: that the profitable crops are the first seven. It is better after a tree has borne seven annual crops to remove it, as a business investment, putting a new tree in its place, rather than allow it to occupy the ground or plant a tree in some other place and use this ground for other things. A good many growers will agree with this statement, but the best fruit is from young trees, and the best gets the money. It is not disputed that the trees will continue to bear after the first seven years, and many times with profit, but if you are in business for gain year in and year out, the above holds good."

When to Harvest Grain.

H. M. Fugel, a farmer and expert miller of Missouri, tells a farmers' institute that wheat should not be harvested till thoroughly ripened. Such wheat keeps better in shock, stack or bin, and it makes much better flour than that harvested in the dough stage of the grain. It will look somewhat shrunken, but in milling the bran flakes off more easily, the flour is whiter and rises better in the oven than that from the smooth, plump wheat cut earlier. The best flour also comes from wheat which has gone through the sweat while yet in the straw. All wheat sweats, either in the stack or bin, and the gain in quality by having it sweat in the straw will more than pay for stacking rather than threshing from the shock.—Germantown (Pa.) Telegraph.

Corn Stalks and Butter.

Every farmer knows that timothy hay, however good it may be for horses, is inferior to corn stalks as a feed for milch cows in winter. The cream and butter made from milk for which corn stalks is the man feed are higher colored and also of better quality than that made by feeding hay. But the corn stalks are not a complete ration, even when re-enforced by corn. A small amount of clover hay with them each day is necessary, whether the stalks are fed dry or from the silo. It is not only the dry feed that the cows need, but the nitrogenous nutriment which the clover furnishes that makes it so valuable.

Keeping Celery.

If you want good, healthy, crisp celery all winter, try this plan: Let the celery remain where it grows as late as possible without freezing, and then dig up, leaving some roots with soil attached. Set in the cellar where the sun can get at it a part of the day, taking care not to set it so close that the air cannot circulate through it. Cover the roots with soil and keep the soil moist and tops dry—do not make the soil so wet it will be sloppy, nor let it get so dry the tops will wilt. Open the windows whenever weather will permit.—Vick's Magazine.

Mice in Young Clover.

It is a mistake to leave a large growth of clover on the land in the fall. There is nothing that mice better like for shelter, as the clover affords both protection and food. We have seen pieces of young clover that in spring after the snow was off were entirely honeycombed by tracks of mice among the clover roots where they had made their runs and had eaten the crowns of large clover roots into the ground. It is by following the roots of succulent plants that mice make their holes for winter refuge.

Dairy Dots.

A really good dairy cow can be profitably kept until she is eight years old.

Don't allow your cows, young cattle or sheep to be pinched in their feed during the winter.

Cows kept in comfortable quarters in winter eat less, thrive better, and give more milk than if exposed to cold or storm.

As a rule, a profitable cow is a good eater, but some cows have eyes larger than their stomachs, like some men.

While it is best to keep water where the cows can help themselves, when this cannot be done conveniently, the best plan is to see that they have all the pure, fresh water they will drink regularly twice a day.

The cow likes regularity, and when the regular routine of her life is disturbed she resents it by giving less milk. She is not very particular whether she has three meals a day or two, but she wants what she does have regularly.

Those who have had much experience know that there is a great difference in salts. A sample should always be thoroughly tried before buying large quantities, no matter what inducement may be offered. If it does not suit it is not wanted at any price.

DEADLIEST WEAPONS KNOWN.

Probably Made to the Special Order of Some Coldblooded Assassin.

"Two of the most beautiful and at the same time murderous objects I have ever seen in all my travels I picked up in Paris during my trip there last summer," said J. V. Atkinson, of Savannah, Ga., to a friend.

"I bought both of them from an old gunsmith in the 'Quartier Latin,' and he assured me they were without doubt the only ones in existence, as far as his knowledge of death-dealing instruments went, and he also told me that he had purchased them of an old Spaniard who had spent most of his life in the South American countries, and had never seen anything that would in any way approach them for villainous, murderous purposes.

"The first, as you see, looks innocent enough, and when I ask you what you think it is you will reply—

"A silver matchbox," answered the reporter, as he gingerly handled the beautifully chased silver object.

"Touch that spring."

At an easy touch the lid of the box flew open on a powerfully hinged spring and disclosed the interior, and in a compartment about one-half of the capacity of the box were a dozen wax matches.

"Now, you'll find a tiny bottom on the side next you and near your thumb. Just press that lightly."

As the suggestion was followed a little, sharp-pointed, creamy white, curved object popped into view from that portion of the box now occupied by the matches.

"What is that?"

"That," said Mr. Atkinson, "is no more nor less than the fore fang of the Great American rattlesnake. You will notice that the fang is sharp as a needle at its point, that it is slit for a distance up the middle, and that it is hollow. You will also observe that a fine, amber-colored, jelly-like substance is contained within the hollow of that fang. That is nothing less horrible than the venom of the rattlesnake, and the rankest poison, the most deadly of agents known to man. A couple of scrapes on a man's hand or face means a certain and a horrible death. Nausea, and vomiting, retching, convulsions, semi-paralysis, complete paralysis, state of coma, death in a most horrible form and the swelling to horrible proportions of the corpse as it rapidly turns black from the virulence of the venom.

"You can readily see what a terrible weapon it would be in the hands of an unscrupulous villain. A scratch or two and the deed would be done, while the victim would simply imagine that he had been scraped by a pin.

"Its companion piece, of devilish ingenuity, is a needle gun. Peculiar looking thing, is it not?" asked Mr. Atkinson, as he passed a richly engraved and silver mounted object, that looked like a cross between a miniature double-barreled shotgun and a revolver, to his friend, who handled it with extreme caution.

"That little gun is but five inches over all, and yet it contains within those chambers, in the box-like part, between those fine watch spring steel barrels and the pistol grip, enough of fiendish mischief to lay out a dozen strong men.

"The charge is a strong and powerful cartridge, made of a highly explosive chemical which, by the peculiar construction of the chambers, makes so little noise that it could not be heard by a person ten feet away. The instrument of destruction is a bunch of fine cambric needles that have had their heads flattened to offer resistance and catch the propelling force, and their points have lain in the very same sort of venom of which I spoke until they are thoroughly corroded with it.

"As they leave the gun they scatter and penetrate to the most vital spots, where their terrible work is quickly done. Nothing short of a post-mortem examination of the most rigid kind would betray the cause of death."

The Saleswoman's Hard Life.

The average age of our saleswomen is but 22 years, and it is rarely the case that a woman finds employment in any establishment for many years. In one establishment it was rumored that a recently retiring partner was to give $50 to all employes who had served him for ten years, and by actual count it was found that out of 2,000 employes but forty-seven had served that length of time. As a rule employes are seldom retained for more than five years, and length of service often is made a reason for dismissal, it being feared that they may acquire the idea that they have a claim upon the firm. Those, then, who enter mercantile establishments with the idea that they may rise to superior positions usually meet with disappointment. One rarely finds the same cash children for two seasons in succession. At the close of the holiday season from one-third to one-half of the employes are discharged, without regard to length of service, only the brightest and shrewdest being retained.

Under the severe discipline enforced only the strongest can endure this life for any length of time. Investigation proves that few can stand for more than two years without suffering from impaired health. The law regarding seats has not been generally observed, and in some establishments where seats were provided saleswomen have been fined if found sitting.

While it is gratifying to know that women can fill these positions satisfactorily, yet, through accepting low wages and submitting to severe discipline, they are depriving other women of employment, and since their entrance into mercantile establishments the wages of salesmen have been reduced 40 per cent. Altogether the position of the saleswoman is not an enviable one, and the wise young woman will give time to learn a trade.—Independent.

NO PATENT ON THIS.

An Up-to-Date Girl, Who Has a New Way of Keeping Her Skirts Clean.

She was a strictly up-to-date girl and she attracted no end of attention as she walked east on Washington avenue, says a St. Louis paper. She was dressed in the height of fashion; she had a bearing as stately as that of a queen, and her face was fair to look upon.

But it was not her face, her dress, or her bearing which attracted attention. Not either nor all three of these. It was the novel way she had of holding up her skirts—or rather of having them held up for her.

Did she have a maid or a page to carry her train like the maidens of high degree of a past age? No, but just a cunning little woolly Scotch terrier. Whether he had been trained to the work, or had picked up the skirt in a spirit of canine playfulness are unsolved problems. But doggy did his work as though he was used to it, and he did it well. He picked up the hem of the skirt in front with his teeth, and ambled along beside her as though he was stuck on his job.

Anecdotes of Beard.

While the late James H. Beard, father of Dan Beard, the artist, was painting a portrait of Zachary Taylor, he said to him: "Well, General, I suppose you are to be our next President?"

"I hope not," grunted the bluff old hero; "no military man has any business in the Presidential chair, but if they offer it to me, I suppose I'll be —— fool enough to accept it."

And he was. Shortly after Mr. Beard's marriage to a niece of Col. Carter, in 1833, he made the Southern campaign tour. Tom Marshall, of Kentucky, was then running for Congress. He was defeated by a song, which Beard wrote, and this brought a challenge to a duel. Eighteen boon companions of the rhymsters answered the challenge, and told Marshall that he must fight all of them, singly or all at once, but the eighteen men he must meet! Somehow this duel never came off, and Marshall never afterward alluded to it but once, and that was when he first saw Beard's canvas, "The Last Victim of the Flood." Standing before the painting, Marshall seemed visibly impressed. Finally, drawing himself up to his full height, he turned to the artist, and said: "Beard, you're a mighty good painter, but you're a —— poor poet."

It Meant Everything.

The man in the bicycle suit laughed heartily.

"Very funny," he said.

"What?" asked the man with a large section of skin gone from his nose.

"Why, these 'Don'ts' for bicyclists," replied the man in the bicycle suit.

"Let's see them," said the man who was short of skin.

The man in the bicycle suit handed him the paper.

"The best one isn't there," said the man with the fantastic nose, shortly. "If it was the rest wouldn't be necessary."

"What do you consider the best one?" asked the man with the bicycle suit.

"Don't ride," answered the man whose nose stood in need of grafting, and then he carefully put a large piece of court plaster where it would do the most good.—Chicago Post.

Boston's Library a Bad Job.

The great new Boston public library has already been found to have been ill-planned and inadequate. It cost $2,500,000, and now $25,000 is about to be expended to construct a "suitable reading-room."

A gray, unsized blotting paper was sold in England, according to Rogers in his history of prices, as far back as 1465.

Never go from a warm atmosphere into a cooler one without keeping the mouth closed, so that the air may be warmed in its passage through the nose before it reaches the lungs.

Never strain the voice in the effort to speak while hoarse. Wait until the hoarseness is recovered from, or the voice may be permanently injured or difficulties of the throat produced.

Never stand still in cold weather for any length of time in the outdoor air, especially after having taken active exercise; and never stand long on the ice or snow, or where the person is exposed to cold wind.

Many believe in withholding salt, pepper, etc., from the sick. This is wrong. Whatever is done toward making the diet desired and appreciated promotes its digestion.

Water and air are food-stuffs. Water acts as a carrying agent to transport foods to the different tissues. The oxygen of the air is need for the tissues and fluids of all forms of animal life.

The food of a person doing ordinary work should be proportioned as follows: Four ounces of proteids or albuminoids, four or five ounces of fats (increase this as the necessity for work or heat increases), eighteen to twenty ounces of starches, and one ounce of salts.

A mustard-plaster ought never to blister the skin. If it burns too much an extra piece of muslin can be placed between it and the body, and can be removed when the patient becomes accustomed to the heat. Mix the mustard with equal quantities of flour and ground ginger.

It has been found by experiment that tea retards digestion. An infusion of 1 per cent. of tea causes a perceptible delay; a 3 per cent. infusion will delay the digestion, sometimes, as much as twelve times the normal period; a 10 per cent. decoction arrests the digestion of all starchy foods.

The eyball rests in a cushion of fat, by which it is surrounded on every side. When the system becomes greatly emaciated through diseases, this fat is absorbed, and the eye sinks further into the head, thus giving the sunken appearance so common in disease.

Butter is highly recommended as a food for pulmonary and other invalids. Therefore, if butter is agreeable to the individual, and occasion no gastric or intestinal disorders, it would seem an important adjunct to the present dietetic treatment. Then, too, if it is an advantage in this condition, why not in other were facts are indicated?

THE SCENTOGRAPH.

The Smelling Machine Is One of the Wonders of the Moment.

A machine which he claims will take its place by the side of the phonograph has been invented by Louis Kramer, a Missourian, who moved to Binghamton, N. Y., about a year ago. It is used to receive and magnify odors of all kinds and is called a scentograph. A patent is to be applied for, but it has been already practically tested. It will take a liquid heretofore regarded as odorless and distill the most delicate perfume. A drop of perfumery or essence placed on the receiver will produce an odor that would in a very short time cause symptoms of suffocation. The grocer might utilize it in detecting adulteration in goods, while it has been suggested that bank paper can be tinctured with a special scent, imperceptible to the ordinary sense of smell, but which could be easily detected when placed in the scentograph, lessening liability of counterfeiting. It is also claimed that the machine will be popular in homes, hospitals, sick rooms, where the air can be kept permeated by most delightful fragrance. The machine is about twelve inches square and eight high. Mr. Kramer says it can be manufactured for $50. It is thought he will have no trouble in obtaining financial aid for organizing a company to place is on the market as soon as the patent is granted.

SMELLING MACHINE.

At Long Range.

As the following is published in the Army and Navy Journal, it may be copied without offense to the military profession, no doubt.

"Father, are generals brave men?" asked Johnny.

"Yes, my son, as a rule," was the answer.

"Then why do artists always make pictures of them standing on a hill three miles away looking at the battle through an opera-glass?"

Plaiting Straw.

The straw-plaiting industry of England gives employment to about 50,000 women and 4,000 to 5,000 men.

ROYAL LIVES AS RISKS.

Large Insurance Upon Princess, Kings and Other European Magnates.

A peculiar and little known branch of insurance is that indulged in by private persons who insure the lives of royalties for their own benefit. From the standpoint of the individual it is of course, pure speculation. The royalty insured may obligingly depart this life shortly after the insurance is effected, in which case there is quite a respectable sum netted; or, on the other hand, he or she may persist in lingering to a good old age, when the insurer benefits but little. But taking out a policy on the life of a royal personage is, on the average, a pretty good "spec."

This is how it is done: You, gentle reader, wish to insure the Prince of Wales (we will say) for the sum of £500. You fill up a proposal form for that amount in the name of "H. R. H. Albert Edward, prince of Wales, duke of Cornwall," etc., and forward it to a company which accepts this kind of insurance. All companies, it must be noted, do not issue policies on royalties' lives to private individuals, but many in quite the first rank do.

On receipt of your proposal the company will inform you of the rate per cent. at which the premium will be charged; then, if you are willing to pay this rate, which is a fairly high one, a policy will be issued in the usual way. Most policies of this kind are "without profits"—i. e., there are no bonus accretions.

Although there are no statistics on the subject, and accuracy of statement is therefore impossible, it is quite probable that the life of her majesty, the queen, is insured hundreds of times in this manner. The same thing is true, to a modified extent, of most of the other members of the royal family.

The duke of Cambridge, for instance, has been for the past twenty years a favorite "subject" for speculators. The reason is obvious, but the rate is, as may be supposed, very high. Many companies also accept proposals on the lives of members of foreign royal houses.

A few days ago a policy on the joint lives of the duke of Cambridge and the ex-king of Hanover, for the sum of £1,000, was in the market. The Hanover monarch is dead and the policy will be paid on the death of the former. It fetched a large sum. On the same day a policy on the joint lives of her majesty the queen and the duke of Cambridge was also disposed of.—London Tit-Bits.

Frank James in a New Role.

Frank James as a guard on express trains carying large amounts of money or valuables is one of the novelties the express people are now arranging. Negotiations have been in progress now for several weeks, but the probabilities are that they will be closed up within a few days. The effect of James' name, in view of his former prowess in robbing trains himself, is what the express companies are aiming after. They do not know, they say, that he could stop a determined robber any more than one of their own messengers, but they think the ordinary train robber would hesitate to tackle him. James is willing to accept the position, and guarantee that no train in his charge will be robbed except over his dead body, with one single provision, and that is that the express people put up a bond of $20,000, this amount to go to his widow in case of his death. The express people are inclined to yield to this, though there is some opposition. James has been firm in standing out for it, and will not go out on the road unless the bond is fixed up to his satisfaction. Since he became a respectable and law-abiding citizen he has taken very good care of his family, and he does not propose to commence doing anything else now. When the negotiations were first begun he was asked if he could shoot with both hands.

"Well," he replied, "it used to be that I could, and I guess I have not forgotten how yet."

James has been working steadily for some time, but has never been able to make an exorbitant salary, and for that reason would be willing to take the risk of this venture. As one of his friends says: "It is not as much risk as he has taken on hundreds of occasions before, when out on one of his raids. The only difference would be that in this he would have the law on his side."

Fathered by Kipling.

Rudyard Kipling gives out this explanation of the statement in an Australian newspaper that "Rudyard Kipling landed on this island at 12 o'clock, and at 12:16 o'clock he had formulated an Australian policy: A young reporter cornered me just after I landed. I treated him kindly, but said firmly that I was not to be interviewed. 'I have not thought of interviewing you,' replied the reporter, with a sadness in his voice; 'I ask a much greater favor than that.'" It turned out that the reporter had an Australian policy which he knew would be of the greatest benefit to the country. No paper would print it. His modest request was that Kipling would let him put forth his theory as the scheme of the novelist. "They will print it," he said, "if I give it as coming from you." "All right," agreed Kipling, "fire ahead." So the young reporter got in four mortal columns telling the people of Australia how to run their country. "I never read the article," said Kipling; "but there must have been some amazing theories in it from the storm it raised."

Electricity.

In Sebnitz, in Saxony, experiments are being made to cover real flowers and leaves with a metallic coating by means of galvanic electricity. A way of doing this has been invented, and the question now is, how to make such weather-proof flowers available for millinery purposes.

PRIME RIB ROAST BEEF.

Butcher's Way of Making It Easy to Cook and to Carve.

Despair was written on his face when he entered a butcher's shop and called the proprietor to one side.

"Look ahere," he said, "I've been married for twelve years, and my family insists on having roast beef at least twice a week. We have had it on an average as often as that for the whole twelve years, and every time we have had it the recording angel has had to work overtime to get down the record of the remarks I am forced to make when I have to carve it. Why, it's a fact I often stay away from home and go to a restaurant and pay a dollar or two for a dinner on days I know there is roast beef waiting for me. Now, what I want to know is whether there is any possibility of getting a prime rib roast that can be carved without cuss words."

Here the butcher laughed immoderately. The customer blushed and got angry.

"It ain't a laughing matter," he thundered.

"Of course it ain't," said the butcher, "but you're the third man that has told me a story like that to-day, and I get 'em every day. It's the easiest thing in the world. Now, look here; let me fix you up a roast." He pulled a side of beef from the ice box and cut off two ribs. "That's exactly the kind of roast you get, ain't it?"

"That's it," said the customer.

"Now watch," said the butcher. "Have your butcher cut off the ends of the ribs like this," and he cut off about four inches of rib ends, leaving the lean eye of the meat and a very little fat on the small end. "Now," he went on, "have him break the bones in this big piece about half-way up, so," and he cut the rib bones about half-way up. "Now, you see, your roast will set flat in the pan and flat on the plate after it is roasted. Let it set bone side down. Instead of carving sideways, now with the knife flat you hold your beef with the fork bone side down and cut off the side of the piece. Do you understand? You have been used to having your beef on the plate the other way and slicing it from the top, haven't you?"

The man said he had. "Well, that's your mistake," continued the butcher. "That's the mistake that most people make. The butcher sends the roast with the ends of the bones broken, but not cut off, and your cook roasts the whole thing. The ends that I have cut off are utterly worthless for roasting; but they are the very finest bones that you can get for soup stock. They'll make a soup stock that'll make your hair grow, and you have been wasting them for twelve years."

The man took his roast and departed, and the butcher remarked that there wasn't anything in the world, so far as he knew, about which there was as much ignorance as there was about fixing a prime rib roast for easy cooking and carving.—New York Sun.

Professor Huxley.

Once, at a London dinner-table, the late Professor Huxley met Roscoe Conkling, of whom he ventured to inquire his views on the subject of civil-service reform. The brilliant American started off immediately in full career upon a denunciatory speech, long, elaborate, rhetorical and effective, but approaching the proportions of an oration rather than those suitable for table talk. Mr. Huxley, a no less forcible talker himself, refrained from making any reply. When he was asked what he thought of Mr. Conkling's speech, however, he paid it the characteristic compliment of calling it "the most brilliant defense I ever heard of a perfectly indefensible thing." At another dinner, at which John Bright was present, the conversation happened to turn upon India, and Mr. Huxley expressed with considerable vigor his imperialist opinions, concluding with the statement that India had been won by the sword, and must be held by the sword. That aroused Bright. His soul blazed out. He spoke as one having authority and inspiration. When he ended, Mr. Huxley, impressed with Bright's sincerity, and not caring for an argument, sat silent. As the company went upstairs some one said to Mr. Huxley that he thought Mr. Bright had gone rather far. "Well," he replied, "I never before understood how thoroughly a man might enjoy being told that he was a fool!"

A Tell-Tale for Boilers.

Boilers are apt to explode when there is an insufficient supply of water in them, owing to frost or some other cause stopping the supply pipe, and the "tell-tale" will be useful to house-holders. The contrivance is simply fixed in a vertical position in the top of the boiler, apart from the flow or other pipes. Before lighting the boiler fire the cock of the tell-tale is turned on, and if water flows from it the boiler is filled; but if not, there is some stoppage in the pipe and the fire must not be lighted.

A Book that Money Cannot Buy.

The most valuable book in the world is said to be a Hebrew Bible at the Vatican in Rome. In 1512, Pope Julius, then in great financial straits, refused to sell it to a syndicate of Hebrews for its weight in gold. The Bible weighs more than 325 pounds, and is never carried by less than three men. The price refused by Pope Julius was about 25,000 pounds, and that, too, when gold was worth at least thrice what it is now.

Rights of Paris Cabman.

The Paris cabman turns to the right, and the London "cabby" to the left. The former sits always on the box in front of his vehicle; the latter is often perched behind it.

When you take a man's contentment away from him, you can't add it to your own.

Budd Knocks Out the District Fairs.

"Praise Budd, from whom all blessings flow."

This is the song that will be heard at every gathering of political heelers and pot-house politicians in this city hereafter. He had no hesitancy in signing his name to a dredger bill of $300,000 that was a benefit to a few interested land-owners along the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers. But the owners of the dredger and their friends must have had a pull with this Buddhist fakir, who, pretending to conduct the highest office in the gift of the people of the State with economy, caters to a few rich corporations and destroys all the hopes and prospects of thousands of farmers, vineyardists, stock-raisers, manufacturers and businessmen in California. There never was a "bud of promise" like this, and we earnestly trust his "withering" in the eyes of the people will continue until he is lost sight of and becomes but a putrid memory. Any farmer who extends to him the glad hand of friendship should be ostracized by his neighbors. budd made a living among them, was elected to Congress by them and their friends, and was placed in the gubernatorial chair by their votes, but he forgets all this when an opportunity comes for him to place his signature to a measure calculated to do them and the State at large some good.

The narrow-minded, self-sufficiency of jimbudd in carrying his personality into every measure coming before him from the Legislature is enough to arouse the most severe condemnation of the public. A friend of the farmers? A friend of labor? As well might Satan profess to be a friend of our Maker. "Let the public be damned" is his motto, as evidenced by his veto of the appropriations for the several fairs, as provided by the Legislature. He has justly earned the contempt of every agriculturist and stock-raiser in the State. He will be whipped from public place and power by every sentiment of justice and condemnation which can arise in the bosoms of an outraged and insulted public.

He may think in his weak and impoverished mind, that he has finally destroyed all the industries in this country, and he can laugh at the discomfiture of the people he injured the most, "but he laughs best who laughs last." His fate is sealed and his name, like that of his god, Grover Cleveland, will be held up to ridicule hereafter.

Language almost fails to express the contempt with which this poor, insignificant fakir is held by all tax-payers. His vetoing of the Printing office bill; and also the State Library are on a par with his ideas of disseminating knowledge. A dredger appropriaition, or a deficiency bill that has been fought in every session of the Legislature for years, receives his approval, but a bill that would not add one-fifth of one per cent to the State taxes for the maintenance of district fairs is killed by one fell stroke of his bold pen.

Two years ago we showed him up in his true colors and aroused considerable opposition among his friends thereby, but to-day, thanks to him and his pen, they are all thinking as we do, and hereafter they will agree that his name shall be "mud."—Breeder and Sportsman.

One provision in the new tariff bill is aimed directly at those Americans who go abroad in the spring and buy their clothing abroad, partly for the purpose of getting it cheaper, and second, for the satisfaction of wearing it among their less fortunate neighbors on their return. Under the new bill, people who visit Europe and buy clothing will have to pay duty on all but $100 worth of the goods which they bring home as baggage. The rule has been under the old law that thousands of Americans have gone abroad to do their own shopping and the shopping for their friends. It is a good feature. If a person is able to go abroad and buy a great many suits of clothes, then he or she ought to be able to pay the tariff on them.—Salt Lake Tribune.

The discovery has recently been made by a Frenchman of how to photograph in colors. If true this sounds the death-knell of paper money. It has been found that a bank note can be photographed to such a nicety, colored seal, numbers and all, that it is utterly impossible to tell it from the original. We hope the Frenchman will come to this country and sell his invention to every counterfeiter in the land. It will show what poor stuff paper is to make money of, and possibly help the cause of bimetallism.

Panamint Booming.

A private letter received lately by Si Drouillard, discoverer of the St. Elmo ledge, contains the information that miners and prospectors are deserting Randsburg for the Panamint range where a number of good claims have been located.

The Panamint region was the scene of mining excitement forty years ago, silver having been discovered there and considerable being taken out.

There was also a gold mine operated and a mill was erected but the ledge pinched out and little in the way of development has since been done.—Californian.

It is reported that there are between 250 and 300 men engaged in prospecting and developing mines in Southern Inyo. Prospectors from all over the west are rushing into this rich but undeveloped mining section. We confidenly expect that the coming summer will see at least 1,000 men engaged in mining in the Argus, Coso, Panamint and Funeral ranges of mountains.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a drug gist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; to-day Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Where ever the good qualities of Chamberlains's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Trout fishing opened on April 1st in accordance with State law, and on Saturday and Sunday last some of our experts made fairly good catches, though the weather at present is still rather too cold and the creeks too low for real good sport. For the benefit all true sportsmen it would be better should the close season in this county extend until the beginning or middle of May, as the spawners caught are filled with eggs and are about ripe for depositing. If the early fishing is carried on to any great extent it will eventually denude our streams of all fish.

Almost a Centenarian.

David Harris, a retired merchant of San Francisco, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mary Harris, 822 Turk street, last Sunday at the great age of ninety-nine years and ten months. His death was the result of a general break down four months ago. Mr. Harris had always been an active man and until just before his last illness was in the habit of taking a walk every morning. He was in full possession of his faculties and was noted for his wonderful vitality. He was born at Lankhorsh, Prussia, in 1797. He leaves four sons and a daughter, Jacob, Joseph, Myer, Abraham and Bertha. Deceased was the father of Isaac Harris, formerly the senior member of the firm of Harris & Rhine of this place, and grandfather of Mrs. Louis Joseph of Big Pine.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery in modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. AN OUTSIDE POCKET.

A kangaroo wears an outside pocket in his overalls. It is a sort of apartment arrangement in which he carries around his whole family, but this is really suggestive as to the use of outside pockets in the overalls of working men, who in machine shops and factories are subjected to sudden hurts and severe bruises. If a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil were stored away in some of these outside pockets, handy and ready for use when some of the sudden hurts and bruises take place, there would be hardly any loss of time in the cure of the worst of them. For the worst bruises it is known to be the best remedy, curing the tenderness and soreness of the spot very promptly, while in the process of curing, the discoloration disappears and the effected parts are fully restored.

Keeping Her Watch In Order.

They were sipping chocolate at a cafe and talking of watches.

"I have carried my watch for ten years," said the senior member of the party, "and it has never cost me a penny for repairs."

"Mercy!" exclaimed another one. "How did you manage?"

"I took care of it. You know men are always making disagreeable remarks about women's watches, and when my husband gave me mine he said it would probably be out of order most of the time. And I just made up my mind to show him that there was one woman in the world who knew how to take care of a watch."

"But have you never lost it or had it stolen?"

"Never. I dropped it several times at first, but it didn't show any marks."

"But do the works never get out of order?"

"The what?"

"The works inside. Have you never broken the mainspring?"

"I never look inside."

"But how do you wind it?"

"I don't wind it. That's how I take care of it and keep it nice."

They all stared a moment. Then they said, "Oh, you clever thing!" and adjourned sine die.—Detroit Free Press.

A Case of Dieting.

At a recent "literary dinner" in London, Mr. I. Zangwill told a story of a certain fat lady of his acquaintance. Her corpulence had so grown upon her that she resolved to consult a physician about it. She had had no previous experience with a "banting" of any sort.

The doctor drew up a careful dietary for her. She must eat dry toast, plain boiled beef, and a few other things of the same lean sort, and in a month return and report the result to the doctor.

At the end of the time the lady came, and was so stout that she could hardly get through the door. The doctor was aghast.

"Did you eat what I told you?" he asked.

"Religiously," she answered.

His brow wrinkled in perplexity. Suddenly he had a flash of inspiration.

"Did you eat anything else?" he asked.

"Why, I ate my ordinary meals," said the lady.

We have noticed that when an old inhabitant's wife dies, he begins to receive less credit around town for his wonderful memory.

Bees as Messengers.

It is reported that an English beekeeper has successfully experimented with bees as carriers of messages, and he thinks that, in some respects, they are superior to pigeons for the purpose. The message, photographed in microscopic characters, is fastened between the insect's wings. It is the habit of the bee to rise in the air, and then fly straight home. Being invisible, except when close at hand, it is suggested that such a bearer of despatches in war would be quite safe from the bullets of the enemy.

Birds Strangely Concealed.

Mr. A. H. Thayer, an artist, believes he has discovered that the light color of the under parts of birds and small mammals serves to conceal them from their enemies. At a recent meeting of the American Ornithologists' Union he proved by experiments that an object nearly of the color of the ground, like a potato, is very conspicuous when placed a few inches above the soil and viewed from a little distance. But when the under side is painted white, and gradually shaded into the color of the upper part, the object disappears by blending with the ground; the whiteness beneath counteracts the effect of the shadow of the body.

Language of the Telegraph.

According to the results of a special study among telegraph operators, conducted by Mr. Noble Harter and Prof. W. L. Bryan of the Indiana University, each operator has a telegraphic language of his own, differing in various particulars from the typical form, although all can, of course, understand one another. The greatest number of words known to have been sent in one minute by the Morse code is forty-nine. The average sending rate per minute is from twenty to twenty-four words of four letters each. Skillful operators can usually receive faster than they can send, but with beginners the case is reversed.

The Bay of Fundy's Tides.

Extraordinary stories are sometimes told of the immense tides in the Bay of Fundy. The scientific facts in regard to them have recently been published by the Canadian Geological Survey. The bay is about 145 miles long, and gradually narrows, and becomes shallower, as it penetrates the land. The upper part divides into two main branches, and several small side bays exist. The highest tides at the mouth of the main bay reach eighteen feet. Going up the bay they increase in height. At Digby Neck they attain 22 feet, at St. John 27 feet, at Petitcodiac River 46 feet, and at Noel River in Cobequid Bay 53 feet, the maximum. Some branch bays are left empty at ebb tide.

The Balancing of Trees.

A very interesting suggestion concerning the utility to a tree of the irregular arrangement of its branches is made by a correspondent of Nature. Watching a large plane-tree during a gale, he observed that while one great limb swayed in one direction, another swayed the opposite way, and although all the branches were plunging and bending before the blast, they did not move in unison, or all at once in the same direction. But for the peculiarity in the motion of the branches, he thinks, the tree could not have escaped uprooting; and he suggests that this kind of balancing serves in general to protect large trees, like oaks and beeches, which have their branches unsymmetrically placed, from being overturned by high winds.

Overhead Weather.

The experiments with kites carrying meteorological instruments, which have been sent to an elevation of more than a mile from Blue Hill, near Boston, have made known some interesting facts about the state of the weather at that height above the ground. Mr. H. H. Clayton, of the Blue Hill Observatory, says that a mile up in the air the temperature is usually from 15 to 25 degrees Fahrenheit colder than at the earth's surface, and "there is virtually no daily change in temperature, the nights being as warm as the days. The only changes are due to the passage of warm and cold waves. During fair weather at this height the days are very damp and the nights extremely dry. The average velocity of the wind is four times as great as at the ground, and hurricanes of 100 miles an hour are not uncommon." It also appears that a warm wave, as a rule, sets in first aloft.

Bullets Deflected by Electricity.

At a recent rifle meeting in Switzerland it was discovered, according to a Geneva journal's report, that the steel-jacketed bullets of the marksmen were swerved from their course by the influence of telegraph and telephone wires running alongside the range. Experiments were then made at Thun by placing four steel cables parallel with the range, and about 40 yards distant from it, and sending a current of 8,000 volts through them. The effect, it is said, was to turn the bullets so far from their course that the deviation amounted to 24 yards on a range of 200 yards. The bullets on being taken from the targets were found to be magnetized. Next, on an artillery range of 3,000 yards, the electro-magnetic influence was generated 200 yards in front of the targets and 40 yards to one side. The projectiles were swerved 14 degrees from a straight line.

Russia's Powerful Fleet.

The Russian fleet in the Black Sea is a most formidable one. There are seven line-of-battleships, ranging between 8,000 and 12,000 tons, 2 armored coast defense vessels, 6 armored cruisers, 3 torpedo cruisers, 23 torpedo boats and 11 cruisers belonging to the volunteer fleet. The latter are not armored, but carry 6 to 14 quick-firing guns. Three of them can steam 20 knots an hour. It is not thought that Turkey can prevent the egress of this powerful fleet.

GENERAL BUTLER.

He Was the First Presidential Candidate to Employ a Press Agent.

"General Butler originated the employment and coined the term of press agent at political headquarters," remarked a gentleman who has given many years to the consideration of active politics. "During his campaign for the presidency on the labor ticket he noticed that the representatives of the newspapers gave but little attention to the labor ticket headquarters. He decided that this should not continue. Bailey, the circus man, who was a friend of General Butler, took some interest in his campaign, and General Butler spoke to him of the neglect of the newspapers. 'Do as we do,' replied Bailey, 'and hire men to take your stuff to the papers — we call them press agents, though you can call them anything else.'

"The idea was adopted immediately and Bailey was asked to spare one of his press agents for a couple of months, which he consented to do, and sent Major Hugh Coyle, who resides in this city during the off circus season, to report to General Butler. Coyle was therefore the first political press agent employed as such. He took hold of the Butler boom and played it for all it was worth, and ran the campaign on regular circus principles. He had a man three or four days ahead of the general, whose duty it was to organize Butler clubs in case there was not any or where the club was an insignificant affair.

"The clubs were organized on the principles and in the same way that armies, villagers and ballets are secured for theatrical or circus representations—that is, hired for the time they were occupied in making the parade. The uniforms, banners, flags, drums, transparencies and other paraphernalia of political clubs were owned by General Butler, and, like a circus tent, were sent to the city where they were to be used one or two days in advance. There is hardly any political organization these days which does not have a press agent, but there are few of them who will ever compare with Hugh Coyle, for he combined great experience with intelligence and was a manager in every sense."—Washington Star.

The Holland Tea Table.

Elegance is reached in the Holland tea table, its standard richly carved in mahogany or antique oak and inlaid with medallions in delft. The top is a movable tray in the beautiful china mounted in brass with heavily chased handles of the metal at either end. A complete tea service of delft accompanies it, making it a drawing room appointment of great beauty and expense. The well informed hostess, although delighted in its possession, will not claim for it genuineness, knowing that the lovely blue china now such a craze is but a close imitation. Only one perfect service of real old Holland delft is owned in this country, and that descended from Dutch ancestors and is so valuable as to be without fixed price.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Cancer Of the Face.

Mrs. Laura E. Mims, of Smithville, Ga., says: "A small pimple of a strawberry color appeared on my cheek; it soon began to grow rapidly, notwithstanding all efforts to check it. My eye became terribly inflamed, and was so swollen that for quite a while I could not see. The doctors said I had Cancer of the most malignant type, and after exhausting their efforts without doing me any good, they gave up the case as hopeless. When informed that my father had died from the same disease, they said I must die, as hereditary Cancer was incurable.

"At this crisis, I was advised to try S.S.S., and in a short while the Cancer began to discharge and continued to do so for three months, then it began to heal. I continued the medicine a while longer until the Cancer disappeared entirely. This was several years ago and there has been no return of the disease."

SUFFER NO MORE NOW!

Paine's Celery Compound is Working Miracles in Curing Disease.

Paine's celery compound is working miracles in the cure of disease!

So says a recent article by the foremost medical essayist in Boston.

Nothing shows more conclusively," he adds, "the astonishing capability of Paine's celery compound than the thoughtful, open-minded class of people who use it and recommend it, both in public and among their closest and dearest friends and relatives. Among us (physicians) there is no longer any hesitancy in recommending this greatest remedy without stint of praise."

About the same time the above article was published there appeared in the Boston Journal, the following letter from David K. Chasser of 452 Windsor st., Cambridgeport, a suburb of Boston:

"I take great pleasure in testifying to the extraordinary merits of Paine's celery compound. For some time past, I have been under the treatment of two well-known local doctors, but their combined efforts proved of no avail. I have been for years a harsh skeptic in regard to advertised medicines, but having suffered excruciating pains in the head, which the doctors informed me were due to neuralgic symptoms, I determined to try Paine's celery compound, on the advice of a friend.

"To my surprise I found an entire change going on after taking a little over three bottles and I began to feel like a new man. I have for the past 10 or 12 years suffered from pains in the back and other symptoms of derangement of the kidneys and bladder, and have spent many sleepless nights in consequence, but now I sleep sound, thanks to the common sense which induced me to try Paine's celery compound. I will ever praise the marvelous potency of this valuable medicine, and at any time will be glad to give personal testimony at my address, should any sufferer care to call, as I consider it selfish to keep such a blessing housed up, and think the proprietors of Paine's celery compound deserving of more thanks than I can convey in words, for making me a new man.

A word to other sufferers:

MAN'S FAITHFUL FRIEND.

Bobby loved me—Bobby's dead—
Who shall say no heaven holds him?
Who shall dare deny that God's
All-embracing love enfolds him?

While the memory of true love
Mortals still delight to cherish,
Who shall say that such a fond,
Faithful heart as his shall perish?

Who shall say no soul looked out
From those eyes that e'er seemed asking
Me to recognize somewhat
More than flesh and blood's mere masking?

Dear dumb Bobby, tried and true!
Faithful friend and stanch defender!
Heaven were nearer to us were all
Human hearts as true and tender.

Many a mighty son of earth
Might have gone and scarce have moved me;
He was but a dog—and yet
Bobby's dead and Bobby loved me!

MR. BOFFIN AND THE BAILIFFS.

"Well! Of all the croolest things as ever wos!" ejaculated Mr. Boffin, the butler.

"It's a wicked shame, that's wot it is, Mr. Boffin," chimed in Mrs. Asprey, the housekeeper.

"Couldn't have b'lieved it of the guv'nor. Never, till this minnit, know'd him to do anything but wot was pufflckly genteel."

"Ah, Mr. Boffin! One don't know where to trust!"

"If he'd a told me I wouldn't have taken it so crool. But to let us in for the bailiffs like this, without a word of warning, and him a kicking up 'is 'eels on a 'oliday! Well, it's a dirtier trick than I knows 'ow to express, Mrs. Asprey. And me a served him faithful, too, for twenty years!"

"I 'ope that when you're writing to him, Mr. Boffin, you'll put it to him quite straight."

"You may trust me, mem. I shall be pufflckly candid. Oh, yes! He'll fidget in his chair when he reads my letter to-morrow. If the posthorfice wouldn't be shut before a messenger could get there I'd send him a wire. But as it is there's no chance of his getting back 'ere till termorrow night."

"If he comes at all, Mr Boffin."

"Oh, I think he'll come, mem. He'll 'ave the proper feeling to come when he gets my letter, Mrs. Asprey."

"Don't you count upon his proper feeling, Mr. Boffin? If he'd have had much proper feeling he'd never have served us this nasty trick. Borrowing fifteen 'undred from a Jew. I never! And him always pretended to be rollin' in money. Well! He don't owe us much wages, that's one comfort."

"No, mem! He've always paid our wages to the day. That we must allow."

"Just his artfulness, Mr. Boffin. A cheap way of keeping up his credit while he was running into debt. I can see through it now."

"And only last week, mem—if you'll believe me—I brought him in a wine bill for seventy-odd pounds, and he settled it as easy and casual as a lord."

"Ah, Mr. Boffin! Brazening it out to the last."

"If anyone," said the butler, oracularly, "had told me an hour ago that the guv'nor wosn't as safe as the Bank of England I'd have said to that man, 'You're a liar and you knows it.' And now to have the bailiff's in!"

As Mr. Boffin spoke a footman popped his head into the housekeeper's room, where the above dialogue was taking place.

"Beg pard'n, Mr. Boffin, sir; but one of them gents is arsking for yer."

"Thank you, William; you may tell the feller that I'll attend to him at my leesure," said Mr. Boffin, with extreme dignity.

"Very good, Mr. Boffin, sir."

And William departed with the message.

"To think of your being hordered about and 'ectored over by those low chaps!" exclaimed the housekeeper, with sympathetic indignation.

"Beggin' your pardon, Mrs. Asprey, but I'm not being hordered about, nor yet 'ectored over, mem." (Mr. Boffin drew up his short obese person to its 'ill height.) "And I sent 'em that message on purpose to let 'em see it. But I am going to see what their next move is, not becos' they horders me—for I knows better than to take horders from such vermin—but becos' I'm the guv'nor's representative; and, shabby as he has be'aved to me after twenty years' service, I still considers myself the trustee, so to speak, of his hinterests and his property."

With this speech, delivered in his most impressive manner, Mr. Boffin quitted the housekeeper and went to join the sheriff's officers in the large front hall.

There were two of them. The one, a square-built, bow-legged, unwholesome-faced man, seedily dressed and of vulgar aspect; the other, a far smarter, more pleasant-looking and more presentable individual, who might easily have passed for a well-to-do clerk or collector. From the first he had taken the lead—indeed, the bow-legged man had scarcely opened his mouth—and was evidently the boss and spokesman of the pair.

"Sorry to trouble you," he said to Mr. Boffin, quite civilly, "but before I go, and leave my man here in possession, I shall have to take an inventory of your master's effects, and I thought that you might like to go round with me while I do so."

"Certainly, I shall wish to keep my heye on you, young man," retorted the butler, with distant frigidity.

"Yes. Of course. Quite so," remarked the other, carelessly, as he produced a notebook from his pocket. "Now then. We may as well begin here—eh? Umph!" (writing) "Front hall—Turkey carpet, oak table, four oak chairs—ecclesiastical pattern, fancy hatrack, case stuffed pheasants, oak stand for same," etc., until he had jotted down all the hall furniture in his notebook.

"Well, where next? Dining-room—eh? Very good. Umph! Turkey carpet No. 2. Two—four—six—eight—ten—twelve Chippendale chairs—red morocco; large mahogany table, antique sideboard—splendid piece, too; ten large portraits in oils—ancestors, I presume. Ah! fine painting that over the sideboard—a Romney? Thought so! Beautiful! bea—u—tiful!"

"Thank you, young man. It's really very kind of you to commend it—most condescending, as I may say," remarked Mr. Boffin, the butler, with sarcasm.

"Eh? What?" laughed the annotator, good-temperedly. "Come, my dear sir, don't look so glum. You may as well put a cheerful face on it. It can't be helped, you know."

"When I want your advice in regard to my personal appearance I shall probably arsk you for it, young man," retorted Mr. Boffin in a withering tone.

"All right. All right. It's no use getting shirty, my good fellow."

"And requesting you will not again apply that vulgar and beastly term to me, young man," gasped Mr. Boffin.

"No offense—no offense," said the other, indifferently, as he continued to look about him and scribble in his notebook. "Let me see. That's all here. Where now? Drawing-room. Ah! yes. Axminster carpet, etc."

And in an instant he was busy jotting down the contents of this apartment, also, Mr. Boffin looking on with a crushing and a stony stare, and the bow-legged individual whistling—or rather hissing—fragments of popular tunes through his set teeth.

They next went to the library. Here was a very fine collection of well-bound books—numbering some 2,000 or 3,000 volumes. The man with the notebook moved slowly round—inspecting the shelves.

"Ha!" he said, as he scribbled away rapidly, "I see your guv'nor's a bibliophile. He has some splendid old books here. I know collectors who would give their weight in gold for one or two of these."

"I'll tell my master what you say," observed Mr. Boffin, haughtily. "I am sure he will be gratified by your recommendations, young man."

"Ah, well, in spite of your sarcasms," said the other, not in the least put out or abashed, "I do happen to know a good deal about articles of virtu, and there are many good judges who set store by my opinion, I can tell you."

"Ho! indeed, young man?" was Mr. Boffin's comment.

"And now," said he of the notebook, as soon as the inventory of the library—a rather lengthy proceeding—was complete. "We had better finish off the rest of the ground floor before going upstairs. Will you show the way?"

"Very well, young man. But I do this same under protest, and that's the candid fack."

The inventory of the kitchen, pantries and other servants' offices was soon completed. That of the cellar was a longer process. Some of the wines were of fine brand and of great age and value, and the annotator was careful to jot these down accurately. They then went upstairs and worked off the bedrooms—followed by the inquisitive eyes of Hannah, the head housemaid, to whom the character of the visitors had not been communicated and who was very curious to learn what was in the wind. Nor should this have been difficult, for although the annotator himself was of no distinctive cut, the air, appearance and manner of his underling simply gave him away. A more typical bailiff never trod in shoe leather.

When the inventory was at length finished it was nearly 9 o'clock. The young man shut up his notebook with a snap and thrust it into his breast pocket. He then said to Mr. Boffin, civilly—and indeed throughout he had evidently tried to discharge his unpleasant duty with as little offense as possible:

"I must be off now. Of course, I shall have to leave my man here in possession. Very sorry. But it is what I am forced to do. Just a word in private," drawing Mr. Boffin aside. "Make him comfortable and treat him decently and you'll find him a most civil and obliging fellow."

"If he is anythink else he won't find it go down with me," replied Mr. Boffin, with dignity.

"No, perhaps not. But it's always wise policy to be on good terms with a man in, I can assure you. Our friend is used to genteel company. That is why I have brought him here. Good night!"

"Good night, young man," said Mr. Boffin, rather mollified by his concluding speech.

"Now, then, my good feller," he remarked, turning to the bow-legged bailiff, after duly shutting and locking the outside door, "I should say as the servants' 'all, with the hunder-servants, is about your fit—eh?"

"Anywhere for me, guv'nor. I'm no ways pertikler," answered the man, with a befitting humility, which still further mollified the butler.

"They'll be having their supper now," continued Mr. Boffin. "You had better join them at once."

"Thank 'ee, guv'nor. I could do a bit of vittles," answered the bailiff. "This inventory business makes a bloke peckish."

"I can't say that it has had that effect on me," was Mr. Boffin's answer. "I feel as if I should never enjoy my food again."

"Ah, you ain't used to this sort of thing, guv'nor, and so it upsets yer," said the bailiff, with a sympathetic shake of his head.

"No, my man, I am not used to it," answered Mr. Boffin. "And the disgrace of it has nearly settled me."

"Disgrace!" ejaculated bowlegs. "Well, now—that is a funny way to look at it. Lord love yer! I was in at a hearl's only last week and at a dook's back in the summer. They didn't think it no disgrace. And why should they? It's downright fashionable—it is really."

"Which, in that case, heaven preserve me from wot is downright fashionable," rejoined Mr. Boffin, fervently. "But 'ere is the servants' 'all, my man. I'll take you in and interdooce you."

"Thank'ee, guv'nor."

Mr. Boffin opened the door and ushered the bailiff in.

"Here's a guest," he explained, "as is going to join you, unexpected, at supper and I leave it to you to see that he's looked after and has his food proper and comfortable."

With that, and with a gracious wave of his hand, to signify that they might again be seated—for all the servants had arisen at the entrance of that great Mr. Boffin—he withdrew to take his own supper in the housekeeper's room with Mrs. Asprey. The bailiff bowed very politely to the assembled scullions and seated himself in a chair which Martha, the scullery maid, placed for him. The company eyed him curiously, but coldly, for the nature of his calling and the reason of his presence were now pretty clear to them all. But he was so civil and pleasant spoken and behaved so deferentially to Mrs. Holly, the cook, and to Miss Hannah, the head housemaid, and so affable to the Misses Sarah, Jane, Eliza and Martha, subordinate domestics, and so respectful to Mr. William, the footman, and so paternal to Walter, the buttons, that they were all on good terms with him almost before they knew where they were.

His conversation, too, was spicy without being improper, and amusing without being vulgar. Nor did he obtrude his remarks unduly. As Mrs. Holly whispered behind her hand to Hannah, "The man knowed his place, and kept there." Mrs. Holly and Miss Hannah were pleased to smile at his funny anecdotes; Mr. William to snigger languidly; as for the four undermaids and the buttons they giggled without reserve. The servants' hall waxed altogether quite jovial. It was obvious that our bow-legged bailiff, in his social capacity, had scored a distinct success.

Supper concluded, he addressed himself to Mrs. Holly with an insinuating and a deferential air; at the same time producing from one of his capacious pockets a large, flat case bottle.

"You would be doing me a great honor, mem," he said, "ef you would allow me—and hoping you don't think it a liberty—to brew the company a leetle bowl of something hot."

"Really, sir," replied cook, regarding the case bottle with a shocked, yet rather inquisitive, expression, "that is a kewrious request of yours, upon my word."

"The fack is, mem, I can't get on without my glass o' sperrits. And I orlways carries it about with me. But it seems selfish like to drink it orl by myself, especially when you've made me so comfortable with my vittles; and if you and the rest of the company would be so kind as to join me in a brew of punch you would obleege me extremely, mem."

Mrs. Holly hesitated and looked at Hannah. Hannah hesitated and looked at Mrs. Holly. The Misses Sarah, Jane, Eliza Martha looked at each other and tittered. Mr. William looked at the ceiling, Master Walter at the wall opposite. The truth was this: Only beer, limited in amount and restricted in strength, was "allowed" to the servants' hall. And the prospect of a glass of something hot was attractive. But here, as at other polite boards, apparent eagerness for food or drink was out of the question. And so—from sheer good breeding—everyone hung back.

"Come now, mem," pressed the bailiff, insinuatingly.

"Well, sir," said Mrs. Holly at last, "I won't say you mustn't, but I couldn't touch a drop."

Hannah couldn't touch a drop, either. Nor could Sarah, Jane, Eliza or Martha. William, however, was understood to say that he didn't mind if he did. While Walter, gathering courage from William's example, expressed an opinion in favor of nightcaps and volunteered to fetch the kettle.

So the kettle was fetched, and a bowl and glasses and a soup ladle. Also—at the bailiff's request—lemons and loaf sugar. Then he compounded a fragrant jorum, with no unpracticed hand. And right insidiously delicious did that jorum smell. But the bailiff and William and Walter were all too gallant to drink unless the ladies gave them a lead. So, not to disappoint them, Mrs. Holly tasted a drop, Hannah a drop, and Sarah, Jane, Eliza and Martha a drop apiece. And then William and Walter and the bailiff several drops. And everyone became pleasant and affable and jocular; so that the servants' hall presented quite a rollicking scene.

While this jollity was in progress Mr. Boffin walked in. The mirth was instantly checked upon his entrance and everyone affected to be unconscious of the punch bowl. The bailiff, however, stood up, and addressing Mr. Boffin with great deference explained the circumstances under which he had taken upon himself to brew the punch, and ventured to hope that Mr. Boffin would condescend to pronounce an opinion upon it. Mr. Boffin did condescend, and was kind enough to say, as he set down his glass, that he had tasted worse.

"But wot I come in to speak about," the butler went on, "is about your sleeping accommodation to-night, my man. There ain't no bed aired ready, so you'll have to make shift downstairs on one of the sofas in the 'all. If we'd knowed that you was coming" (this with sarcasm) "we'd have got the best spare room ready for you, you may be sure."

"Oh, anything 'll do for me, guv'nor. I'll be quite satisfied to sleep on the floor, if you like."

"We won't ask you to do that," said Mr. Boffin, condescendingly. "Hannah—see that this good man is provided with a blanket and pillier, and show him the way to the front 'all."

And having wished the under-servants good-night, and suggested that it was time they were going to bed, he retired to his own apartment. "Which," he had previously said to the housekeeper, "it's the first time in my life, Mrs. Asprey, mem, that I shall have laid down under the same roof with a bumbailiff. I know I shan't sleep a wink for thinking of it."

But the circumstances did not, after all, affect his repose. For he slept just as well, or better, than usual.

* * * * * * *

And when he awoke at a late hour next morning—ah! what an awakening that was! For first it was Hannah, then William, then Sarah, then Jane who rushed to him with such items of appalling news as made poor Mr. Boffin's gray hairs literally stand on end. He huddled on his clothes, in terrible agitation, and went downstairs to see for himself.

Alas! It was all too true. He now realized, with a dizzy sense of horror, how he had been imposed upon; how those two knaves had so artfully schemed it that they had made an inventory of all his master's most valuable curiosities under his (Mr. Boffin's) very nose; and how (for the fact that both he and all the other servants had slept so much longer than usual now had an obvious significance) the household had been inveigled into partaking of drugged punch.

The Romney had gone—cut out of its frame; some priceless curios from the drawing-room had gone; twelve rare volumes from the library had gone, ten dozen of the choicest wine in the cellar had gone; and—so had the bow-legged bailiff.—London Truth.

How Lover Worked.

Samuel Lover's daughter, Mrs. Fanny Schmid, writes her recollections of "The Author of 'Rory O'More'" for the Century. Mrs. Schmid says: His industry was such that in the busiest years of his life he did not even grant himself time to look at the daily papers, or to read any new book that was much talked of. His wife always read the papers and the new books for him, giving him in conversation a resume of the news of the day and the contents of the books, so that he was always well informed of everything that was going on. If anything exceedingly important was on hand in the political world, or if any part of a book was particularly interesting or well written, these she would read to him while he was painting.

Many artists are as dumb as fishes at their easels; but he could converse charmingly while he was painting, which was a particularly pleasant quality for his sitters. In painting or in writing he worked indefatigably, and seemed to be independent of the "moods" to which many artists appear to be victims. As to his songs, he used to say himself that he never wrote a song in his life except when he couldn't help it. The songs used to "come to him," generally words and melody simultaneously, so that he had only to write them down. Frequently the idea of a song would come when he was occupied with something quite different, as, for instance, while painting. He would then leave his easel, write down the idea, and return to his work. Afterward he would return to the idea, and work it out.

New York's Composite Personality.

Mrs. Schuyler Van Rensselaer contributes to the Century a paper entitled "Places in New York," in which she gives a picture of interesting phases of life in the New World metropolis. Mrs. Van Rensselaer says: More than 76 per cent. of those who people New York to-day were born of foreign mothers; more than 40 per cent. were born on foreign soil themselves; and many of these aliens, brought from many different lands, continue here to live in clusters with their own kin after their own kind. Yet while each of these clusters, and each of their wandering offshoots, modifies the New World metropolis, all of them together do not destroy its cohesion, they simply intensify its curious composite sort of personality. They make it multifariously diverse, but they leave it an entity. They touch every portion of it with pungent exotic flavors, but as flavoring an American whole. They play their several parts in a civic life that is cosmoramic beyond the belief of those who have not studied it well, but they do not turn New York into a cosmopolitan town; for this means a town which, overwhelmed by its strangers, has lost, or has never possessed, a character of its own.

Honesty Rebuked.

After a cable car conductor had passed me several times without asking for my fare I touched his arm and gave him a nickel. A few moments later as I left the car I found him on the rear platform alone. "Don't ever do that again," he said. "If a conductor misses you don't hunt him up. He doesn't want you to do it. If I miss a passenger the chances are about even that no one will notice it except the fellow himself. But when he rushes up to pay a fare I have missed everybody notices the fact that I have been negligent, and if there is a 'spotter' aboard I lose my job. The next time save your nickel; it may help me save my position."—Chicago Times-Herald.

All the Better.

He—We seem to have got here rather too soon, the house is quite empty.

She—All the better; every one will be able to get a good view of me as they come in.—Pick-Me-Up.

Using the Incubator.

The best oil is none too good for the incubator lamp. Poor oil, besides being dangerous, crusts the wick, and encrusted wicks give very little heat. Lamps must be filled and cleaned even when the best oil is used. To forget this duty once may spoil a hatch and waste much precious time. It will pay to make an effort to keep the incubator room at a moderate and even temperature. A temperature of thirty degrees to forty degrees in the room requires the lamp of the incubator to be run at its full capacity, and of necessity there will be a free circulation of air, and, hence, too much ventilation resulting in too great evaporation and a drying out of the eggs. This is the case with a majority of the machines. A very high temperature is just as inconvenient. A range of twenty degrees, between fifty degrees and seventy degrees, without the presence of coal gas, is about right. Temporary changes, higher or lower, for an hour or two, do little harm. No self-regulating apparatus, however ingenious, will dispense with the use of brains in running an incubator. It is sometimes needful to discount the assertions of the catalogues in this respect, and to watch vigilantly that the machinery does not bind or chafe, or become disarranged by the heat and moisture within or from some obstruction without. This is the time to work the incubator for all it is worth.—Poultry World.

Shipping Fowls by Express.

Poultry breeders and poultry buyers are interested as to how best to ship breeding stock by express. Expressmen have found much fault in the way fowls were occasionally prepared for shipment, and the result was double first-class charges used to be made on poultry. As this seemed an injustice, poultrymen and expressmen came together and decided on what should constitute a proper coop in consideration of single first-class merchandise rates instead of double. This conference resulted in the adoption of a "one rate" price instead of a "double rate." Also, that coops must be strong and slatted and not injured by other packages being piled on them. If the coop is sufficiently strong, expressmen have no objection to coops being lined inside with cloth to protect birds from a draft. The coop illustrated above is four feet long, two feet wide, and twenty inches high, made entirely of laths, excepting the bottom and the boards around the base, which are four inches wide, of bottom box stuff. The laths on the sides are securely nailed to posts which are of one inch square spruce. Such a coop will carry any amount of merchandise piled on top of it, as much so as though it was a box.—Farm Poultry.

Care of Potatoes in Cellars.

There are many dangers of injury to potatoes kept in cellars. That of being frozen is what happens the worst, but it is always guarded against, so that no caution is needed about that. Much greater is the likelihood that the potatoes are kept too warm, and especially if they are piled in bins. Some warmth comes always from potatoes thus massed, and those in the bin will be untouched by frost even when a film of ice will form over water set in vessels on the floor, or the potatoes left outside the heap have been frozen. It is doubtless the warmth developed by sprouting the potato that creates the warmth that protects the mass as it slowly rises through it. When it is seen that potatoes are beginning to sprout, they should be removed and the larger sprouts be broken off. Those that are meant for seed ought to be put in a mass, unless in a pit out of doors, and they should be got out and exposed to air and light so soon as the weather begins to grow warm.—Exchange.

Cooked Food Does Not Pay.

Cooking of grain and meal for stock is only profitable when it is done in cold weather and the feed is given while still warm. A temperature at or near animal heat is an advantage, as the stomach has to warm to that extent. But the heat required for cooking carbonaceous food expands it so that the stomach can contain less of it. If the digestion be good the uncooked food will in the same bulk have the most nutriment and do the greatest good.

Ground Meats and Fish.

If you cannot get fresh meat for your poultry, or if the expense is apparently too great, use the commercial ground meat. Fish is also excellent for ducks if the eggs are to be used for hatching, and ground fish will be very acceptable to them. In the winter season, when grain is largely used, meat or fish will serve to supply the deficiency of nitrogen. One cent a pound is about the cost for ground meat or fish, and they are very cheap, even at double the price.

Storage Purifies Water.

After all, the best kind of purifier is nature's own. The minute organisms known as bacteria are the chief causes of the impurity of drinking water. These invisible creatures have to live as well as their larger brethren, and they must eat to live. As soon as they have eaten all in the water that there is to feed on they die. Dr. Frankland has stated, from his recent examination of water stored for two weeks, that it seems as pure and free from bacteria life as if it had been passed through the best of filters; but it seems strange that this should have so recently come under Dr. Frankland's experience. Every one knows that there is no purer or better water in the world than that which is supplied to seafaring people. Almost any kind of water stored away in a ship's tank becomes absolutely pure after the vessel has been a few weeks at sea. This is usually ascribed in popular language to fermentation; but there is really nothing to ferment, it is simply that the bacteria have eaten everything in the water there is to eat and then died of starvation.—Meehan's Monthly.

A Milking Stool.

The self-descriptive illustration, from Farm and Home, shows a practical milking stool, readily made by any one understanding the use of edge tools. The seat board should be made of two-inch material, at least two feet long, and wide enough for comfortable seating, say nine inches wide and chamfered to fit. Where the bucket rests it must be in width to correspond, which can be secured by placing bucket on the board and marking circle with pencil before sawing out in chamfer style. The "rounds" should be made from hard wood and about fourteen inches long, end to end; make holes 1¼ inch. Every farmer and dairyman should have a workshop and kit of tools so as to make the many convenient and serviceable articles described in Farm and Home, thus saving annually hundreds of dollars.

A HOME-MADE MILK STOOL.

Feeding Wheat to Stock.

Wheat is now much dearer than any other kind of feed. Yetthere are circumstances in which some wheat may be fed even at present prices. It does not pay even when wheat is cheapest to feed it exclusively. It has more nitrogenous substance in proportion to its bulk than any other grain, and is therefore very likely when fed alone to ferment in the stomach. Yet when combined with other grains and cut hay or straw the wheat paid for hogs very near its present prices in the market. Therefore a small proportion may yet be fed with profit. For one kind of stock wheat is always the cheapest grain. That is for laying hens. But they must not be fed much lest the hens fatten, as they will just the same as if overfed with corn.—American Cultivator.

Eradicating Sheep Scab.

Hot baths made by putting sulphur in water are a specific for scab in sheep. It is very infectious, and any sheep having it should be kept by itself. The bath will need to be repeated at intervals of one or two days, for at least three times, in order to destroy germs that were not advanced enough for the first application to kill. The Australian sheep growers have succeeded in eradicating scab from that country. Now every sheep brought to Australia has to submit to the bath once to destroy possible germs that have not become visible.

Milk for Calves.

Professor Daine, of the Harris Institute at Preston, writing on the subject of the feeding of calves, says: "For the first month calves should have new milk, which, after that period, should be gradually diminished, skim milk being substituted, fresh from the separator, if possible, as it is then warm."

A Nation of Spitters.

A correspondent of the New York Herald meets the views of many when he writes:

I am heartily in sympathy with the edict issued by the Board of Health against spiting on the floors of public conveyances. But it should go further than this; it should forbid the befouling of sidewalks, stairways and lobbies by expectoration. A more disgusting, hoggish and nauseating habit than that of expectoration could not possibly be conceived. I have traveled in many civilized lands, and on my return to my own country I have been made ashamed of my people by being compelled to observe their beastly habit of expectorating, which habit during my sojourn abroad was unobserved by me, if it existed at all.

The absence of handkerchiefs or their non-use by the men of our country is noticeable and to be regretted. The spitting habit is chronic in our land. The further west one goes the more frequent is its exhibition. Let us try and revive in the men of our country a spirt of decency, so that tobacco chewers, gum chewers and other chewers will cease to make themselves offensive.

THOSE INFANT INDUSTRIES.

Los Angeles Herald: There are some things in regard to a protective tariff that few Republicans realize. One is that when you produce a surplus of any commodity, the Liverpool price fixes the prices of the whole product.

Let us look at the articles we export every year and see what infant industries need protection. We export agricultural implements, animals, breadstuffs, carriages, horse and railroad cars, coal, copper ore and copper manufactures, raw cotton, manufactured cotton, apples, hops, iron and steel manufactures, leathers, manufactures of paraffine, paraffine wax, beef products, oleomargarine, dairy products, hog products, distilled spirits and vegetables.

There are others, but these are the principal ones. Can any of these, by any stretch of the imagination, be considered infant industries?

The only way to protect an export is to pay a bounty, but when we are as well able to take cars of ourselves as we are today, we have no need of bounties. We have had an illustration of the bounty in the sugar business. The farmer took the bulk of the risk in buying the land of the sugar company and raising the beets. Then the protected infant industry took the lion's share of the bounty and was glad.

Protect our infant industries if we have any, and raise revenue from our luxuries. Use the income tax and the other tax the way the farmers work their horses. They give the strong horse the short end of the evener and he must do the most work. Stop indirect taxation and tax each man directly for his share of the cost of government.

The Bradley Martins have gone to Europe, and are to stay there. Mrs. Martin is said to to have declared just before her departure that she would never come to New York to live again nor spend a cent in the city other than what might have to be expended in business. She said she would come to New York when some of her commercial interests might require her presence. This is because of the way in which she was lampooned and otherwise attacked for spending $300,000 on a fancy dress ball in New York.

Mrs. Martin's dislike to New York is natural in the circumstances. Whether the New Yorkers will admire themselves when they find what they have done remains to be seen. From a business stand point they have, of course, made fools of themselves; but perhaps New York has recently set higher ideals for herself. If so, it was quite a sudden change.

Wherever the Martins may settle in Europe they will find themselves welcome. They may not get into society to any extent; but there is no community over there that will run them out for spending their money freely; and their money will go further in Europe than it did in New York, which may, all things considered, be now classed as the jay town par excellence of the United States. Owing to the fun it had with Mrs. Martin, the rent it pays to Mr. and Mrs. Martin will henceforth be spent in Europe instead of among its own tradespeople.

The Fresno Watchman, after condemning in strong terms the late legislature and averring that there are cranks, freaks and fools in other legislatures than that of California, remarks:

"A New Yorker proposed a bill to fine heavily any newspaper that prints a picture or cartoon of a citizen without his written consent.

"A Missourian would fine any railroad whose employe 'flirted with a female on the line.'

"Texas passed a law prohibiting every merchant from doing business at the old stand.

"The Illinois legislature debated for days a bill which assumed to limit the lines of goods one man or firm might carry—the object being to do away with general furnishing and department stores.

"Kansas, under the inspiring leadership of Senator Pfeffer, Jerry Simpson ane Mrs. Lease, re-enacted the Ten Commandments and seriously considered emasculation as a punishment for crime.

"California was bad enough, but she did not corral them all! There are others.

It is fortunate for him that Gladstone does not live in Russia or Germany. In his recent address to the English people he speaks of two great States of Europe as ruled by two young and inexperienced Emperors, young men who have given more evidences of eccentricities, inherited and acquired, than evidences of ability. How William and Nicholas must ache to lay hands on the "Grand Old Man."

The Havanna correspondent of the London Times has returned from Cuba. He is credited with being an entirely reliable man and widely known. He is reported as saying in view of all the circumstances, and of the barbarities practiced by the Spanish in Cuba, it is clearly the duty of the United States to intervene in the name of humanity. That was a merciless dig in our ribs.

The fight between the Sugar Trust and the Arbuckles is one in which the public will feel disposed to sympathize with the latter. The coffee men had the audacity to enter the exclusive field of the trust and the latter purposes to crush their business as a penalty.

MARRIED.

McCARREL—GOODALE—At the residence of the bride, near Aberdeen, April 11, 1897, by Rev Thos. H. Nicholas, Henan J. McCarrel to Miss Maggie P. Goodale.

J. J. Gunn came in from Minnietta yesterday morning.

Jack Black of Bishop was in Independence on Monday last.

R. S. Miner, Esq., arrived by last Monday's train and will remain here for several days.

O. H. Hill, the genial proprietor of the Valley Hotel of Bishop, was in Independence during the week.

Mrs. L. F. J. Wrinkle, of Keeler, has been visiting Miss Lena Thomson, of Fort Independence, during the week.

Mrs. James Rose returned on Saturday last from a month's visit with her daughter, Mrs. J. J. Morton, of Keeler.

Independence has appeared quite lively during the past week on account of jurymen and witnesses in attendance on the Superior Court.

Mrs. S. A. Densmore accompanied her son, Judge Gill, as far as Mojave, from there she will go to Stockton and other cities on a visit to relatives and friends.

On Wednesday and Thursday nights fake shows by three mountebank artists were given here. All we can say is, that people who like such a show, it was just such a show as such people would like.

Wells Barnes, Al Goodman and Henry Malone, left yesterday morning for the Coso Springs where they intend spending a few weeks to take advantage of the curative properties of the mud and waters.

Judge Gill and family left by road on Thursday last for Riverside, at which place they intend to make their future home. Many freinds of the Judge and of his estimable wife and family were sorry to witness their departure, but are hoping the change of climate may prove beneficial to the Judge's health.

Aleah L. Conklin, who has been in the Bakersfield section of country for the past three months with his sheep, returned to his home at Aberdeen on Wednesday last. Mr. Conklin informs us that he has had good luck with his flock and his increase will equal 100 per cent. There has been plenty of feed and the sheep are in splendid condition.

W. S. Greene, Special Agent of Land Department from Washington, D. C., accompanied by Donald Green and S. A. Hanson, of San Francisco, arrived by Monday's train. Mr. Greene came here for the purpose of inspecting the late surveys made for the Government by Mr. Hanson. On Wednesday he received a telegram recalling him to Washington, before he had fairly commenced the work.

That Serenade.

Last Saturday evening at about eight o'clock an unusual stillness reigned in this town. At nine o'clock there was a sound of many feet approaching, and a large crowd composed of both ladies and gentlemen swept down our main street. Opposite the residence of Mr. Peter Forbes there was a sudden halt, and a serenade played in faultless style, and ably conducted by Mr. Dennis Hession awoke the echoes of the night. After some ten minutes duration the music suddenly ceased as Mr. Walter Lamar, our worthy Judge, appeared on the porch on behalf of himself and his young wife to receive his evening callers. The house was filled: The ladies being gracefully received by Mrs. Lamar in the parlor, and the gentlemen by Mr. Lamar in the drawing room, many waiting their turn outside the house. All the guests were regaled with such refreshments as suited their tastes, and this night's festivity will especially be remembered by the children, whose appreciation of the candies and nuts no words can express.

Panamint Notes

Chas. Morgan, representing the Donahue's of San Francisco, has purchased property to the value of $15,000 from Lavincia, in Panamint district. They will soon commence work in Tuber canyon.

R. Decker, Heneberry, Kern and several other parties have sold mining claims to capitalists.

Over 400 men are already in the district and more are arriving daily. The mines are all looking fairly well, and everything points to a prosperous mining season.

L. F. J. Wrinkle is surveying for Langford and others some 18 or 20 mining locations for patents at Pleasant canyon, southern Inyo.

The Randsburg Miner says: Parties returning from the Panamint country are well pleased with their trip. They report a large amount of development work being done on claims in that region. The new mining town of Ballarat has been laid out on the western slope of Telescope range with plenty of water easily obtainable, and already quite a camp has been formed.

Fatal Accident at Cerro Gordo

We have received the following details of a fatal accident which occurred on Saturday last at the Cerro Gordo mines. Two Chinamen were working down waste in an old incline at the bottom of which there was a dangerous pile of debris. Contrary to orders and without the knowledge of the management, they went below the run, and one of them starting some loose boulders, both men were entombed beneath a ponderous mass of debris. Up to yesterday their bodies had not been recovered.

Americans are the most inventive people on earth. To them have been issued nearly 600,000 patents, or more than one-third of all the patents issued in the world. No discovery in modern years has been of greater benefit to mankind than Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy, or has done more to relieve pain and suffering. J. W. Vaughn of Oakton, Ky., says: "I have used Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhœa Remedy in my family for several years, and find it to be the best medicine I ever tried for cramps in the stomach and bowels. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

Two years ago R. J. Warren, a druggist at Pleasant Brook, N. Y., bought a small supply of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. He sums up the result as follows: "At that time the goods were unknown in this section; to-day Chamberlain's Cough Remedy is a household word." It is the same in hundreds of communities. Where ever the good qualities of Chamberlains's Cough Remedy become known the people will have nothing else. For sale by Nathan Rhine, Druggist.

We received a communication during the week for publication which lacks a signature, and as we make it an inviolable rule not to publish communications without knowing who the writer is, we decline printing it.
